Farley Attack Upon Landon Is Laid to Fear By Hamilton

Criticism of Republican Candidate Draws Prompt Reply.

Choice of Landon Attacked by Norris

Nebraska Senator Says Kansan Is 'Unknown' in Radio Talk.

By Felix Bruner.

John Hamilton, newly-elected Republican national chairman, slammed back last night at criticisms of Alf M. Landon and the Republican platform by James A. Farley, the Democratic chairman.

Hamilton charged that Farley was "frightened and disappointed" over the nomination of the Kansas Governor, and that he had tried to prevent the selection.

"He seems irritated that the party did not accept his impartial advice, and he expresses his irritation in his usual intemperate language," Hamilton said in his statement, issued in Chicago.

As the Hamilton statement was being issued, Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, nominally a Republican, but an ardent New Deal supporter, was lambasting Landon over the radio. He followed the lead of Farley by charging that Landon was "unknown" and said that the fact that the G. O. P. convention nominated an "unknown" was proof that the delegates were taking orders from "representatives of special interests."

Says He Is Confused.

Hamilton said he was a little confused about answering Farley.

"If I knew whether he was making his statement as the Postmaster General or the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, or the chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee, I could probably answer him more effectively," he said.

The Republican chairman said he agreed with Farley that there is a crucial domestic problem "and that is in getting rid of the present 'grab bag' gang in Washington."

He said he was not surprised that Farley considered Landon's interpretation of the Republican money plank as "hazy," adding, "I know that anything having to do with a sound monetary system is hazy to Mr. Farley." He pointed out that the 1932 Democratic platform called for "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards."

"There is another line in the Republican platform," Hamilton said, "which Mr. Farley and his friends probably will not understand. I refer to that which mentions 'private honor and public faith.'"

Chicago Headquarters.

The Associated Press quoted Hamilton as saying that he would establish an office in Chicago and remain there for about 60 per cent of the time. He said all party executives would be appointed and functioning by July 1. Hamilton flew to Chicago from Cleveland. He will go to Topeka by train. He intends to attend a meeting of the party's national finance committee in New York June 22.

Meanwhile, Republicans were mapping their campaign strategy and preparing for the conference between Landon and Col. Frank Knox, the Vice Presidential nominee, at Topeka, Kans., tonight.

Minnesota was winding up a quiet primary campaign with the election today. Three major parties, Republican, Democratic and Farmer-Labor will name candidates for Governor, Senator and Congress. A bitter Democratic fight for the Governorship of Indiana will be concluded in a convention at Indianapolis tomorrow, where delegates to the Philadelphia convention also will be chosen. Virginia Democrats will name convention delegates at a convention in Norfolk tomorrow.

In New York the National Women's Pro-Roosevelt League announced that Secretary Perkins had accepted chairmanship of a chain letter movement in which each woman receiving a letter asking her to vote for Roosevelt will be expected to pass the same word by mail to five other women. Miss Perkins has sent the first letter.

Philadelphia reports said the city still is preparing for "the biggest

By the Associated Press.

Beaconsfield, England, June 14.—His autobiography completed, Gilbert Keith Chesterton, 62, versatile English author and critic, died today of heart disease.

The "Prince of Paradoxes," as he was often referred to, died at his home in this London suburb after a week's illness. His wife was present.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday.

"G. K.," as he was generally known, became ill when he returned from a holiday in France. He had finished his autobiography in April, and passed his sixty-second birthday May 29, before he became stricken.

He was converted to the Roman Catholic faith in 1922, partly through the influence of his most intimate friend, Hilaire Belloc, and became an outstanding champion of that church.

Visited U. S. Often.

He visited the United States several times. Certain aspects of American life, particularly prohibition, drew comment from him.

After his last visit to the United States, in 1931, he called New York "terrifying" and said:

"I've been in Tennessee, where if a man insults you you are expected to shoot him with a gun or you're not considered a gentleman. Call it barbarism or chivalry, it's the feudal spirit full of feud.

"From one end to the other of this magnificent civilization there is no such thing as a village. When you enter a little town it is simply an eyesore to anybody of European tradition or instincts. The first things met are yellow tin advertisements, tin buildings with frameworks of lead and glass and tin shops, and then, thank God, you are out of town."

Only PWA Left As Relief Marks 3d Anniversary

First Program, Begun 3 Years Ago Tomorrow, Virtually Finished.

Tomorrow will be the third anniversary of the signature by President Roosevelt of the national industrial recovery act and the beginning of the Administration's relief and recovery activities, referred to in the recent Republican National Convention as the "three long years."

The NIRA created the National Recovery Administration, the Public Works Administration and the office of co-ordinator of transportation. At almost the same time the Home Owners Loan Corporation was created.

Of these institutions, only the Public Works Administration will remain in approximately its original form when the anniversary shall have passed. The NRA was declared unconstitutional on May 27, 1935, and finally has been disbanded. The office of coordinator of transportation, held by Joseph B. Eastman, expires after three years. The HOLC has ceased to lend, but will continue, probably for years, as a collection organization.

Virtually Completed.

Secretary Ickes, in a statement yesterday, said the first PWA program is virtually completed. The organization now is engaged on its second program, and a third is expected to be started soon if the provision for the Ickes organization remains in the deficiency appropriation bill pending before a Congressional conference committee.

"It is agreed," Ickes said, "that the thousands of projects that have been built with the assistance of PWA loans and grants are 'useful public works.' Our record for three years on the score of the usefulness of the work we have done would meet any challenger."

He said that in the three years of its existence the PWA had provided approximately 5,801,000 man-years of direct and indirect employment. He said the PWA has accomplished much more in providing employment than is generally supposed.

"A factual study by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics recently shows that he ratio of indirect to direct employment on completed PWA municipal power plant projects is 4½ to 1.

Chiefs to Spur Tax Bill, Key To Adjourning

Roosevelt's Return Today Likely to Stimulate Congress' Drive.

By the Associated Press.

Prodded by leaders who saw the necessity for another Congressional recess if agreement on the tax bill did not come promptly, House and Senate members trudged back to the Capital yesterday for a week of struggle toward a June 20 adjournment goal.

The tax measure stood pretty much where Congress left it nine days ago when an interim was called for the Republican National Convention—stalled in a Senate-House conference set up to bring accord in the conflicting revenue ideas of the two Congress branches.

While expressing hope for agreement on the tax and other pending bills this week, leaders indicated if that could not be realized a second recess to cover the period of the Democratic National Convention, opening at Philadelphia June 23, was probable.

Roosevelt to Return.

President Roosevelt's return to Washington today after a swing through the Southwest, was expected to stimulate the adjournment drive.

There was belief in some quarters of Capitol Hill that the White House might step into the picture if tax conferees are unable to reach a compromise and the resultant delay menaces adjournment.

The chief point of difference on the tax bill was the question of taxing undistributed corporation profits. The House graduated levy up to 42½ per cent, as against the Senate proposal of a flat 7 per cent tax, comes nearer to Administration views.

Several Senators who have been standing for the lower rate were described as almost ready to concede to the House.

In addition to the tax bill, there still was lacking agreement on the $2,430,829,000 deficiency-relief bill. Conferees on the measure did not meet during the recess, putting off until this week the untangling of several knotty problems in that measure.

Housing Bill Comes Up.

The Senate planned to take up the Wagner low cost housing bill today while the House program called for consideration of the conference report on the Interior De-

Spreckels, 5 Spectators Hurt As Boat Jumps Lake, Hits Truck

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, June 14.—Adolph Spreckels, wealthy sportsman, was injured seriously today when he lost control of an outboard motorboat and the craft raced up the beach of Green Lake, hurtled through a crowd of spectators and crashed on top of a sound truck.

At least five spectators also were hurt.

Spreckels was thrown high in the air against a telephone pole, where he hung suspended by an arm from one of the spike-like climbing steps until removed by spectators and taken to a hospital. Attendants said his condition was serious but not necessarily dangerous.

The hospital later reported Spreckels was unconscious and greatly weakened from loss of blood, with an arm lacerated from shoulder to wrist. Friends stood by to learn whether a blood transfusion would be needed.

The young sportsman, formerly of Seattle but now of Eugene, Oreg., had finished one heat of a race and was headed toward the landing float when the automatic throttle on his boat apparently jammed. The boat raced for the beach, leaped high as it struck land and catapulted Spreckels into the air. It skidded along the ground, and finally bounded upon the truck.

None of the spectators was believed seriously hurt, with the possible exception of Ord Lockhart, of Seattle, who was watching the races from a wheelchair. He was taken to a hospital but attendants said the extent of his injuries probably would not be fully determined for some time.

Spreckels is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Spreckels 2d and the grandson of the late John D. Spreckels, of the California sugar family. He was recently divorced from Sybil Esme and remarried to the former Miss Dorothy Belle Endicott, of Eugene, Oreg., where the couple now lives.

Long prominent in outboard motorboat racing circles, Spreckels recently announced he was "through with racing," but borrowed a boat from Finley Webb, Wenatchee, Wash., driver, to enter the regatta, which was held in connection with a sportsmen's show here. He came to Seattle not long ago to begin a cruise on Puget Sound and adjacent waters in a boat he had built here.

Lincoln Faith In Man Cited By Roosevelt

President Visits Cabin, Kentucky Birthplace of Emancipator.

By the Associated Press.

Aboard Roosevelt Train En Route to Washington, June 14.—President Roosevelt, in a formal statement issued on his train after visiting Lincoln's birthplate at Hodgenville, Ky., late today, urged a new pledge of "fidelity to the faith which Lincoln held in the common man—the faith so simply expressed when he said:

"'As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy.'"

The President ended his 4,000-mile Western speaking trip at the Birthplace of the Civil War President, where a throng of Kentuckians stood in Memorial Park in a blazing sun and watched him tour the granite-inclosed log cabin and sign the guest book.

He made no speech at Hodgenville. He had spoken earlier in the day in dedicating the George Rogers Clark Memorial at Vincennes, Ind.

Arriving at Louisville in the afternoon en route to Hodgenville, he was greeted by a large group of Kentucky officials and politicians who accompanied him to Lincoln's boyhood home.

Welcomed by Chandler.

Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler extended a "hearty welcome" to the President and said the presence of the large crowd at the depot showed Kentucky "guaranteed not to neglect him next November."

Robert W. Bingham, of Louisville, ambassador to London; United States Senator M. M. Logan, former Representative John Y. Young, candidate for Logan's seat, and acting Mayor Horace Taylor were among the group who boarded the train there.

The President said he was glad to come to Louisville and wished he could stay longer. The next time, he said, he would make a "regular visit."

The text of the President's statement on his visit to Hodgenville, where he motored from Elizabethtown, 15 miles away, follows:

"I have visited the cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born. I have come here individually, as one of many millions of Americans whose lives have been influenced for the good by Abraham Lincoln.

"Very Window Is Sante."

"I live, temporarily, in the same house and the same rooms once occupied by him. The very window from which he gazed in the dark days is the same.

"But this chain is even more personal than the scenes of his official life; for here was born and lived the child. Here is the promise, later to be so splendidly fulfilled.

"I have taken from this cabin a renewed confidence that the spirit of America is not dead, that men and means will be found to explore and conquer the problems of a new time with no less humanity and no less fortitude than his.

"Here we can renew our pledge of fidelity to the faith which Lincoln held in the common man—the faith so simply expressed when he said:

"'As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy.'"

Gov. Paul V. McNutt of Indiana introduced the President from a flag-covered platform in front of the circular granite monument of Greek architecture at Vincennes.

"On this spot," he said, "it was made known that we were to have a nation instead of a confederacy of seaboard States."

Taking as his text Clark's pronouncement that all religions would be tolerated in America and a 1787 ordinance encouraging religion, morality and knowledge, the President said:

"Today religion is still free within our borders; it must ever remain so.

"Today morality means the same thing as it meant in the days of George Rogers Clark, though we must need apply it to many situations which George Rogers Clark never dreamed of.

"In his day among the pioneers there were jumpers of land claims and those who sought to swindle their neighbors, though they were poor in this world's goods and lived in sparsely settled communities.

"Today among our teeming mil-

Coughlin Scorns Both Candidates

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 14.—Father Charles E. Coughlin declared tonight the election of Congressional members was the important feature of the fourthcoming national election and beside that "neither of the Presidential candidates is worth a nickel," not even "a plugged nickel."

The Detroit priest made his statement in an interview with newspapermen after he had said in a radio interview that he believed President Roosevelt would be re-elected but that it would be the "last Democratic Administration for some time."

Father Coughlin told newspapermen he would not make any statement now on his political platform but that on next Friday in New York he would deliver a radio speech which "would startle the Nation."

Jewry Seeks To Put Cause Up to League

Formation of Bureau on Anti-Semitism Data Also Is Urged.

More than 1,000 representatives of American Jewry concluded their two-day session at the Hotel Willard last night with the election to the World Jewish Congress of 50 delegates, instructed to propose establishment of a commission to represent Jews "before the League of Nations and specific governments."

This Commission on Civil and Political Relations would, in effect, give to the Jews the united front which has been the keynote of their convention here.

The delegates also will propose the formation of two other bodies, a bureau of research and information on anti-Semitism and an institute of economic research."

5 Delegates at Large.

Heading the 50 delegates elected yesterday will be five delegates at large. They are Julian W. Mack, Dr. Stephen S. Wise and Louis Lipsky, all of New York; Rabbi I. M. Ashinsky, of Pittsburgh, and Joseph Schlossberg, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

Representative John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts, was guest speaker at a dinner given last night in honor of Dr. Wise, who is sailing today for Europe. McCormack decried racial and religious persecution and warned that dictatorships always destroy personal liberty.

Among the speakers were Charles Edward Russell, president of the Pro-Palestine Foundation; Max Brauer, former Mayor of Altona, Germany, who was exiled because of his opposition to Nazism; Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, Civil Service Commissioner; Rabbi and Mrs. Stephen S. Wise, and Dr. Samuel Margoshes, editor of The Day, widely circulated Jewish daily newspaper.

Luncheon Is Given.

The sessions opened at 10 a. m. with a lengthy address by Rabbi Wise in which he set forth the benefits expected to come from the World Jewish Congress in Geneva in August.

At noon a luncheon was given by the Women's Division of the American Jewish Congress for Mrs. Wise, its president. Among the guests were Representative Sol Bloom, of New York; Mrs. McMillin and Russell.

Brauer, the luncheon speaker, told his listeners, about 200 in number, that the Jewish task "in these fearful times is unlimited solidarity with the helpless victims of oppression and persecution, and the defense and vigorous assertion of the rights of all Jews as citizens and valuable members of their national communities."

The German, who described himself as "a non-Jew who has always taken a deep interest in Jewish affairs," said:

"The Jewish problem affects everyone, individually and collectively. We who have prided ourselves on living in a century of progress and liberalism and who marvel at our own achievements are now in the midst of a crude renascence of the most brutal instincts in mankind. The work of more than a century is being undone. Liberalism and tolerance are being wiped out by fascism."

Gigantic Fraud.

Declaring that Hitler has "perpetrated the most gigantic fraud that was ever perpetrated upon a people," Brauer said the German leader had organized a crusade against the Jews to unite other classes, which had been warring among themselves.

"Rampant nationalism," the exile said, "has become a convenient method in Germany for glossing over the underlying deep differences within the people and to rally them, at least outwardly, around the banner of revived militarism and exalted nationalism."

Mrs. Wise, in explaining the manifold activities of the women's division of the congress, said Hitler has "at least brought many people to their senses."

"He has made the Jews conscious of their race and proud of it," she declared. She told of meeting a composer, a German exile, in Paris.

"He said to me," Mrs. Wise related, "'when I was in Germany I didn't want to be a Jew. But tonight I go back to the synagogue, never to leave it again.'"

Russell, in his brief talk at the luncheon, bewailed the fact that "the people who have contributed most to the onward march of man-

Admiral Beatty died March 10 and Viscount Borodale succeeded to his father's title. His mother, Ethel Field Beatty, daughter of Marshall Field, of Chicago, died July 17, 1932. Her son inherited $1,000,000 upon her death.

Bonus Mail to Yield $15,000,000 Today To Capital's Veterans

Steals Bonus 'March' on Buddies

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

L. O. Powell, Augusta, Ga., veteran, who, by mistake, received his bonus bonds Saturday, two days ahead of schedule. The Powells are expecting the stork and the bonds will pay the expenses of the bird.

25,000 in City Share in $1,650,000,000 Payment in U. S.

Deliveries to Start Here at 5:30 P. M.

Train Guards Heavy; Business Anticipates a Minor Boom.

About $15,000,000 in crisp baby bonus bonds, neatly wrapped in brown packets, will be delivered to 25,000 District of Columbia veterans before this nightfall.

Postoffices throughout the country early this morning were receiving thousands of similarly wrapped packets, representing their home town's share of the nearly $1,650,000,000 in bonds that were placed in the mails in 12 Federal Reserve centers immediately after midnight last night in payment of the Government's debt to World War veterans.

Before the end of the week, Treasury experts predicted, delivery of the bonds in exchange for 3,500,000 adjusted service certificates will be virtually completed, while thousands will have turned bonds into Government checks.

The first official delivery of a bonus bond, and probably the first certification for trading bonds into cash, will be made at 9 a. m. today to an invalid soldier at Walter Reed Hospital. The soldier will be designated by Walter Reed officials only a few minutes before the "delivery of the bonus" ceremony, symbolic of the payment of the bonus throughout the country.

Need Only to Sign.

Letter carriers delivering bond packets will be empowered to certify them for cashing, and all the veteran in the sick bed will have to do will be to sign his name on designated dotted lines and wait from 24 to 48 hours for his check.

Roughly, 1,500 packets of bonds are to be delivered this morning to veterans at eight military posts and hospitals in the city, Postmaster Vincent C. Burke announced last night. Besides Walter Reed Hospital, these places will be Mount Alto Hospital, Chevy Chase Sanitarium, Tuberculosis and Naval Hospitals, Soldiers' Home, the Marine Barracks and the Army War College. At each of the hospitals the carriers and clerks making the deliveries will be allowed to certify bonds for cashing.

At 5:30 p. m., after the city's 400 letter carriers have completed their routine daily deliveries and had a chance to eat early dinners, delivery of the bonds to the remaining veterans in the city will start. Roughly, 25,000 of the 28,000 packets of bonds that are to be distributed in the District were in the postoffice last night, Burke said, and will be delivered today and tonight, the majority of them before nightfall.

Each veteran must sign for his own bonds and those who miss the carrier tonight will have a second opportunity during the day tomorrow. After that the bonds can be collected at the District postoffice, if the veteran satisfactorily identifies himself.

3,000 "Unprocessed."

Since the bonds of almost 3,000 veterans still must be "processed," Treasury and Postoffice officials warned veterans not to be disturbed if they failed to receive theirs tonight. In some cases delivery may be delayed until the latter part of the week, officials pointed out.

Treasury clerks had almost caught up with the Veterans' Administration last night after working extra shifts Saturday night and all day yesterday. Saturday at 4 p. m., when the Treasury day ended officially, 2,670,000 envelopes, containing $50 bonds and checks for sums under that figure, had been prepared for shipment by the Treasury. Since then in the District alone the 350 Treasury workers have processed an additional $400,000 in bonds.

The Veterans' Administration has approved nearly 3,000,000 applications of the 3,517,000 veterans who are entitled to payment. Applications are continuing to come in at the rate of about 50,000 a week.

Washington Treasury and Postoffice workers have borne more than their share of the work of processing and distributing the payments. Last night at the stroke of midnight roughly 700,000 packets of bonds were shipped out of the postoffice, bound not only for cities and towns in the Richmond Federal

Veterans at Mount Alto to Pay Doctors With Part of Bonus

90 Patients, 16 of Them Former War Nurses, Are Cheerful; Make Plans to Buy Homes and Take Trips After They Leave Hospital.

The payment of long overdue doctor's bills has a prominent place in the bonus-spending plans of 90 veterans, 16 of them former war nurses, who will receive their bonus bonds today at Mount Alto Veteran's Hospital.

Several of them hopelessly crippled and all suffering from serious ailments, in many cases directly traceable to war injuries, these men and women seemed cheerful last night as they spoke of the homes they would buy, the cross-country trips they woud make, their children that hey would pot through school and the businesses they would go into—after they leave the hospital.

Several smiled when asked how they intended to spend the several hundred dollars they will receive in bonus money, and, pointing to an arm or leg swathed in bandages, replied:

"How can we tell now?"

"I'm a farmer," said one man, his left arm resting in a steel brace, "but I don't know whether I'll ever be able to farm again. If I can, I'll use the money on my farm, but, if not, I'll need all the money I'm getting."

Another veteran, with a fractured neck, hoped to use the money to give his 14-year-old boy "a better start in life than I had by sending him to school."

"But I don't know," he added, "I may need the money for doctor bills for myself."

"I'm going to law school," announced a third, fairly young veteran, in a wheel chair. "I'm employed regularly as an auditor by the Government and have always wanted to go to law school. But I've got three youngsters and I never had enough money, I couldn't afford it. Now I've got the money."

One veteran almost ready to be discharged from the hospital, said: 'I'm going to finish paying off on a lot I bought at Thirty-third street. I'm paying 6 per cent interest on the lot and I'll only get 3 per cent by not cashing the bonds. It's good business, isn't it, to cash the bonds

Senator Burke's Daughter Wed In Illinois City

By the Associated Press.

Rockton, Ill., June 14.—Their plans to wed at the Beloit College Chapel thwarted by the Wisconsin law requiring a five-day notice of intention to marry, Beatrice Burke, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, and Louis C. Bean, of Washington, were married here late today at the Congregational Church.

The bride is 23 and the bridegroom, employed in the Public Health Service, 26. They will live at Washington.

Miss Barbara Burke, a sister, was the bridesmaid, and Louis Schull, of Chadron, Nebr., was the bridegroom. Bean attended Alabama and Virginia universities and his bride was graduated from Northwestern University in 1934.

Floridians Leave Beach Homes As Storm in Gulf Nears Coast

By the Associated Press.

Jacksonville, Fla., June 14—Beach residents at resorts on the Florida central and lower fest coast evacuated their homes tonight and moved into cities as a tropical disturbance approached.

The Weather Bureau here said the storm, which poured torrential rain over the coastal area, would pass inland in the vicinity of Fort Myers around midnight.

The latter city reported a falling barometer with torrential downpours. Rain today measured 5.22 inches and was continuing at the last report.

Tamiami Trail was reported closed to traffic in the region of Bonita Springs, where the Imperial River swirled around the bridge.

The town of Everglades was cut off from communications but no wind was reported there—only heavy rain.

Beach residents at Fort Myers, Sarasota, St. Petersburg and other points moved to cities as the storm approached. In St. Petersburg yachts and other small craft left the yacht basin for protected harbors.

Storm warnings, which earlier were placed up between Tampa and Miami, were extended from Tarpon Springs on the west coast to Titusville on the east coast by the weather bureau here in a 9:30 advisory.

Weather officials declared the disturbance was of only moderate intensity. It was located about 100 miles southwest of Fort Myers at 8 p. m., the advisory said.

Moving about 17 miles an hour, it was expected to reach the West Coast in the vicinity of Fort Myers by or before midnight, and probably cross to the east coast by morning "somewhat weakened in intensity."

Caution was advised for smaller vessels in waters around south and central Florida "and all other interests."

Landon Rests Before Opening Election Drive

Nominee Attends Church, Meets Tomorrow With Knox, Hamilton.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., June 14.—Gov. Alf M. Landon, wearing a white linen suit, sport shoes and a new straw hat, went with his wife to church today—then enjoyed at home his first day of relaxation since the Republican Party nominated him for President.

Mrs. Landon, wearing a gray dress and dark hat, arrived with her husband in a coupe at the First Methodist Church as the organ prelude opened the service.

One or two persons stopped to shake their hands before they went to their seats near the front of the high-arched auditorium. They listened to a sermon on "Living by Consent to the Best," preached by the Rev. Harold Case.

After the services, the Landons were surrounded outside by well-wishers and progress to their car was slow.

Chats With Reporters.

Pausing to chat with newsmen, the Governor said he intended to relax during the afternoon preparatory to launching vigorously next week into plans for the Republican campaign.

Dr. Case referred specifically to Landon before the sermon, desiring to "speak for the congregation, Topeka and Kansas in expressing our enthusiasm and approval in the selection of our Governor for that deserved honor, greatest in the power of his party to grant."

Both the Governor and Mrs. Landon joined in the singing of the church hymns. The auditorium, which seats more than 1,000, was well filled.

Informed Republican sources speculated today on an early opening of the campaign, possibly by the middle of August, with a swing by Landon through the East.

An Eastern trip, leaders said, most likely would include speaking engagements in New York, Boston and other centers. A trip to the West later was considered likely.

Gov. Landon, Col. Knox, of Chicago, the Vice Presidential nominee, and National Committee Chairman John D. M. Hamilton will meet with the national sub-committee Tuesday to chart the course of the campaign and plan the opening salvo.

It was considered likely headquarters for the national chairman would be moved to Chicago. Hamilton is scheduled to arrive here tomorrow.

Dr. Case, 34, built the theme of his sermon around persons who are gripped by a great ideal.

He said the records were replete with characters who rose from obscurity and "became great when he or she gave consent to live by an overpowering ideal and became emblazoned on the history of mankind."

Shift Held Logical.

Chicago, June 14 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox, Vice Presidential nominee of the Republican Party, said tonight "it would be the logical thing to expect" the party's national headquarters to be shifted from Washington to Chicago for the November election campaign.

"That's only speculation, however," he added in commenting on reports that such a move was planned.

The publisher declared there had been "no decision that I know of," and said none would be made until he and party leaders had held a "council of war" with Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, Presidential nominee, at Topeka on Tuesday.

Knox said he had no meeting scheduled here tonight or tomorrow with John Hamilton, Landon campaign manager and new Republican national chairman, but that he "would be glad to see John" if opportunity arose.

The rough-riding colonel, in the midst of a "quiet day" that included five hours of strenuous golf, said he would probably accompany Hamilton—due to arrive in Chicago from Cleveland by air tonight—and others of the party high command to the Topeka confab, leaving here tomorrow night.

show on earth," the Democratic convention, which opens June 23.

Norris in his radio talk referred to the ovation given Herbert Hoover at Cleveland, and added that if the delegates "had the courage of their convictions they would have nominated Mr. Hoover for President." He asserted that Hoover had "tipped off to our European debtors the idea that they should repudiate the debts they owed America."

The Nebraska Senator told the radio audience that "the way to achieve the moral, intellectual and spiritual objectives of our people is simply to re-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt." He charged that the Republicans had not criticized constructively, but that they "threw monkey wrenches into the machinery."

Praising the Roosevelt Administration, Norris recited a long list of New Deal laws and demanded to know whether "these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland, if given the power of government, would repeal any of these beneficial laws." He referred to the President's latest tax proposals as "one of the greatest reforms now pending."

Referring to Landon, Norris said: "The eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland nominated a man for President whose greatest asset is that nobody knows him and nobody knows what he stands for. It does not necessarily follow from this that the nominee is not a good man. But it does mean that if he will not take orders from the undisclosed bosses who made him, then these eminent gentlemen have been deceived.

"The very fact that reactionary alleged leaders from Maine to California, from Minnesota to Florida, and from all other sections of our great country, tumbled over one another to indorse a man they did not know and never heard of before is conclusive proof that somewhere behind the scene the representaives of special interests issued the commands that percolated down through the reactionary organization to the lieutenant in local control, and they obeyed the recognized voice of their masters"

Politics and People

Gov. Landon's Sudden Rise to Political Power Remains Mystery to Delegates.

By Franklyn Waltman

MANY delegates to the Republican National Convention left Cleveland unable to perceive the secret of Gov. Alf M. Landon's sudden rise to political power, even though satisfied with his choice as the Presidential nominee.

WALTMAN.

Nevertheless, wherever one turned in Cleveland, Landon sentiment was found to predominate. Veteran leaders conceded the latter, but likewise conceded it was a mystery to them—so much of a mystery that it caught the "Old Guard," with few exceptions, off guard.

Inquiry among various delegates as to why they were supporting Landon devolped invariably the answer that back home he was the popular choice—that Landon, the newcomer, the unknown in national politics, was the only one of the half-dozen Republican Presidential candidates who had struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the Republican rank and file.

Such was sufficient for the delegates who went to Cleveland more determined than ever before to reflect the sentiment of the folks back home. But it does not answer the question of "Why Landon?" Why should the folks back home turn to the Kansas Governor, who has said little about his views, had not entered a single primary contest and had maintained an aloof position from the pre-convention skirmishing by remaining strictly at home?

* * *

Democratic Chairman James A. Farley explains the mystery by asserting that the Kansan was "lifted to eminence by the familiar build-up process." By what "familiar build-up process?" Does he mean by the tricks of political publicity? If so, he is wrong. If that were the answer Col. Frank Knox, of Illinois, would have the first place on the Republican ticket instead of the second, for he had the best publicity organization.

But if this publicity machine were faulty, how about Senator William E. Borah and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg? They had spent years building themselves up with the aid of the best sounding board in the Nation, the United States Senate. Yet neither stirred the voters whatever, except in isolated places.

No, the answer to "why Landon" is deeper than the technique of political propaganda and "build-up." The answer to the riddle lies deeper in the hearts of men and in the temper of the times and I believe that, quite by accident, I hit on the answer a few days ago.

* * *

I was dining with a grand old man. Some 40 years ago he came to this country from Europe. He prospered and is now one of the leaders of his profession. He has grown to love this country with an ardor not possible in one born here or in one ignorant of the restrictions of Europe. He spoke of the spiritual values he found in America—the freedom for individual initiative and the opportunity here.

He came to America, he explained, because it was a light in the window of a dark night—a beckoning light. America to him was a romantic place, and, he has never lost the touch of romance that is America. He has not piled up much of this world's goods, but he has sat with the great of America as well as with the lowly. He knows, I believe, the soul of America—the bad as well as the good.

"This is a crucial moment in America's life," he asserted. "I think the Republican convention and this year's political campaign are far more important than any ever held in my time. It is truly historic and I believe that most of us fail to realize and understand the real significance of it.

"I sincerely believe that America must make a vital decision. This country is confronted by two possible courses. Down one road lies the route by which your great country has come. It is the road of individual initiative, of unlimited opportunity beckoning ambitious men to achievements in the last 150 years greater than civilization ever before has seen—and all classes have profited and attained higher standards of living.

"The other road—and we have taken a few steps down it—leads to collectivism, representative of the dead hand of governmental bureaucracy on the activities of men. It has become the fashion—I hope temporarily—to sneer at those virtues of the pioneering era which made America great and made Americans a self-reliant, happy people.

"And the pity of it is that there is no need for it. American youth need not feel any shame at the heritage received from its fathers. Unless stifled by collectivism their opportunity is as great as that of the youth of the '48s or the '93s and they are better equipped to face life than their fathers. Yours remains a fresh and young country, as the world goes, blessed with natural resources and an industrious, ingenious people if given a chance."

And as my elderly friend talked, adding charm to his words by his quaint accent, I suddenly detected a yearning in his voice for an America that was slipping away. Visions of the Kansas prairies, covered wagons, fields of waving ripe grain, huge oil derricks, men in mines and builders of railroads in a panorama flashed across the mind—and I remembered that in many of my friends there had been that note of yearning for those former times.

Without intending to do so, I thought of Alf M. Landon of Kansas, in leather boots that reached to his knees, smoking a pipe. Behind him was the prairie and the covered wagon. There was the secret of Alf Landon. He has behind him a picture for which many Americans yearn. What picture does Senators Borah or Vandenberg conjure up? What picture Col. Knox? None in the sense that you see the prairie and the covered wagon when Landon's name is spoken.

Apparently, many thousands—perhaps millions—of American men and women care not what Alf Landon says or thinks. He has become a symbol to them—a symbol of the surroundings of their childhood and of that for which they yearn—and they are ready to fight for him in the hope of restoring the life which they want. And when Jim Farley sneered at a "typical prairie State," he sneered at that in which they believed and his remark was widely resented.

* * * *

If Landon's managers deserve any credit for "building him up," it is due them solely because they perceived the temper of the times and exploited the picture he represents. The same managers could not have done that with a Borah, a Knox or a Vandenberg.

Indiana Democrats To Name Governor

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, June 14.—A long three-sided fight for the Democratic nomination for Governor, with Indiana's two United States Senators and Gov. Paul V. McNutt each supporting a different candidate, will reach its climax here Tuesday when nominations for all State offices will be made in the biennial State convention.

Weight of the State administration has been thrown behind the candidacy of M. Clifford Townsend, present lieutenant governor. United States Senator Frederick Van Nuys is openly backing E. Kirk McKinney, former head of the Home Owners Loan Corporation in Indiana, while Senator Sherman Minton is supporting Pleas E. Greenlee.

Greenlee formerly was executive secretary to Gov. McNutt, but was ousted after he became a candidate for Governor.

Gov. McNutt has not declared himself openly as favoring Townsend, but others in the State's official family are boosting the lieutenant governor.

HamiltonReply To Farley Cites Plank 'Truths'

G.O.P. Chairman Declares Democratic Party Chief Is Frightened.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 14.—The statement issued today by John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, in answer to a statement made last night by James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, follows:

Mr. Farley is, of course, both frightened and disappointed. He is clearly dissatisfied both with the Republican candidate for the Presidency and with the Republican platform. That was one of the purposes of the Cleveland convention. He has been trying for months to prevent the nomination of Gov. Landon. He seems irritated that the party did not accept his impartial advice, and he expresses his irritation in his usual intemperate language.

I am not particularly anxious to indulge in a battle of statements with Mr. Farley, but if he desires to continue during the coming weeks to misrepresent everything which is too honest for him to understand, I am perfectly willing to take issue with him. I shall, however, always feel some confusion during this campaign answering Mr. Farley. If I knew whether he was making his statement as the Postmaster General or the chairman of the Democratic National Committee or the chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee I could probably answer him more effectively.

"Hard Truths."

The Republican platform contains certain hard truths about the record of the New Deal which Mr. Farley does not seem to want to answer. By his silence I assume he admits that the entire indictment is true. As a matter of fact, he admits this by more than silence when he agrees that there are crucial domestic problems pressing for solution. There is a crucial domestic problem and that is getting rid of the present "grab-bag" gang in Washington.

"Mr. Farley says 'the great game of deception will soon be under way,' the citizens of this country including many of those who once belonged to the apparently debunked Democratic Party had thought that the game of deception had been going on at a high rate of speed for the last 3½ years.

I am not surprised that Mr. Farley should have seen fit to refer to Gov. Landon's interpretation of the monetaary plank as a hazy one, for I know that anything having to do with a sound monetary system is hazy to Mr. Farley, and it is quite comprehensible that he should have not understood either Gov. Landon's interpretation or the platform which provided for "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." Mr. Farley, like his chief, has conveniently forgotten that these words were included in the Democratic platform of 1932. But the reaction of the country showed that in one brief telegram, which took two minutes to read, Gov. Landon made his stand on money clearer than Mr. Roosevelt has ever been able to do through three years of administration as Chief Executive.

Cites Farley 'Creed.'

We can all have a great deal of sympathy for Mr. Farley. His political creed does not include the possibility of a party united by anything except patronage. His experience with platforms and pledges is limited. Gov. Landon's telegram to the convention was in direct contrast to Mr. Roosevelt's action on the 1932 Democratic platform. Mr. Roosevelt was so eager for the nomination at any price that he flew to Chicago to accept the platform 100 per cent and so far as the country knows never glanced at it again. Gov. Landon's action was different—I said on Thursday night that their characters were different. Every action bears my statement out.

There is another line in the Republican platform which Mr. Farley and his friends probably will not understand. I refer to that which mentions "private honor and public faith."

Conference reports on the Treasury-Postoffice and the District appropriation measures remained to be acted upon as well as reports on the Robinson-Patman chain store regulatory bill and the anti-lobby measures, as well as a number of minor bills.

House leaders were anxious to start consideration by tomorrow of the Vinson-Guffey bill, designed as a substitute for the coal control act invalidated by the Supreme Court.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, Saturday told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee miners intended to "shut down" the bituminous coal industry if the substitute measure was not passed at this session of Congress.

Liberty League Attacks Power 'Socialization'

Booklet Condemns Policies of New Deal Affecting Electric Industry.

By the Associated Press.

Protesting that "socialistic experimentation has run riot" in the electric industry, the American Liberty League yesterday issued a 30-page pamphlet condemning the power policies of the New Deal.

"The steps toward socialization of the electric power industry, already taken in an unbelievably short space of time, bear witness to what may be imminent in other industries if present policies are continued," the booklet said.

"The government has seized the market of the private electric power industry in many areas. The threat of complete socialization hangs over the industry in practically all sections of the country."

The league denied that TVA deserved credit for "greatly increased" sales of electricity and appliances by private companies in the Tennessee Valley. The State of Georgia led all States east of the Mississippi in home power consumption as early as 1932, it said, and the recent rise in appliance sales has been greater elsewhere than in the TVA area.

The Administration's flood control and navigation improvement measures were described as "legal fictions" to disguise efforts to socialize the power industry.

"The TVA proposes in its program of reservoir construction to inundate permanently considerably more than twice as much land in the Tennessee Valley as ever has been affected by floods," the league said. "No important development of navigation is expected, and if it actually took place the chief effect would be to injure the railroads."

The league listen ten Governmental activities, which it contended contribute "to the trend toward socialization." They included TVA, the Rural Electrification Administration, Federal grants for local power projects, and the proposed Mississippi Valley Authority.

The Mississippi Valley Authority bill, it declared, "affects one-third of the area of the United States and one-fourth of its population. It builds up a super-State with sovereignty superior to that of almost half the States of the union."

Many Government power projects were not formally authorized by Congress, the pamplet said, claiming that they "have their foundation chiefly in Administration policies rather than in the considered judgment of the legislative branch."

Labor in France Is Held Ready To Seize Plants

Workers Parade to Mark 'Victories' in Strikes; 500,000 Still Out.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 14.—Maurice Thorez, leader of the Communist Party, told his celebrating followers today France's factories would soon become the property of the workers.

He spoke as Leftist workers celebrated labor gains now in general strikes which they call a "bloodless revolution."

Thorez, in an address at Lille, said strikers had not damaged the factories they occupied "because they knew they would soon become their property."

Recalling Premier Léon Blum's admission to the Chamber of Deputies that the striker's occupation was illegal, Thorez said, "it simply is a new legality which is forming" and that the strikes proved the working class is "capable of taking its own destiny in its own hands."

Marcel Cachin, who was the first Communist to enter the Senate, said the party would continue the fight to establish a Soviet in France despite its membership in the Leftist Popular Front, which supports Premier Blum.

Communists massed in the Paris Sports Stadium in "victory demonstrations" following legislation providing higher pay and shorter hours to end widespread strikes.

The capital region generally observed the "great day of workers' solidarity."

More than 50,000 followers of the Leftist Popular Frona, now in control of the government, marched at Nancy, Le Havre, Cherbourg, Rouen and elsewhere in the provinces in orderly demonstrations.

Red flags raised on the 215-foot towers of the Nancy Cathedral gave police a real mystery. Authorities were unable to lower the banners immediately or to discover how they were put there.

Evacuation parades from the principal factories occupied by the workers began last night and ended the major strikes 18 days after the crisis started.

Four hundred factories were emptied, but 50 were still held by "folded arms" strikers in the Paris region.

Half Million to Return.

About half of the more than 1,000,000 workers originally affected agreed to return to work tomorrow. Strikes persisted in Paris department stores and insurance companies, workers maintaining their weary occupation. Negotiations will resume tomorrow.

The General Federation of Labor asserted accords granting wage increases of from 3 to 15 per cent and collective bargaining represented the "greatest labor victory in history" and proclaimed, "this situation gives us the right to declare a new political and social era is born."

The federation hailed the Popular Front government's labor code and urged the Senate to take speedy action Tuesday on bills for a 44-hour week, paid vacations and collective bargaining in order that they will be enacted into law. They were passed by the Chamber of Deputies last week.

Employers have estimated the labor reforms would increase the cost of production by 35 per cent but the Government hopes to offset this by a business revival.

Most mobile guards who have been on duty during the strike were recalled to barracks, cafes were opened and sunlight streaming on sidewalks and terraces found Paris in a typical Sunday holiday mood.

Nazis Reported Target of Purge Victim's Band

'Revenge Roehm' Terror Organization Actvie, Paris Paper Says.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 14.—The Berlin correspondent of the newspaper Paris-Soir, said in a dispatch tonight that a secret organization of the followers of Capt. Ernst Roehm, Brownshirt leader slain in the Nazi "blood purge" of June, 1934, is waging a terrorist campaign of murder and threats against Nazi officials.

Even Reichsfuhrer Adolf Hitler, the report said, and other Nazi chieftains have received threatening letters from the "Roehm Racher" (Revenge Roehm) Organization.

It was said further that the bodies of many murdered S. S. (Schutzstaffel) and S. A. (Storm Troops) members have been found in isolated spots, with the initials of the secret group, "RR," scrawled over their chests in chalk.

Roehm had 20,000 Brownshirt followers, who swore to avenge their chieftain after the "blood purge," the dispatch declared. The Storm Troop officer was slain at Hitler's order in the 1934 "cleanup."

Because the high Nazi chiefs are too well-guarded, the "Roehm Racher" has waged war on those factions of the SA and SS which took leading roles in the assassinations, the Paris-Soir reported.

A strict censorship has been imposed, making it impossible to estimate the number of men slain in the terrorist campaign, the newspaper added.

The Reich government badly worried, has taken special precautions against riots which may be led by the "Revenge Roehm" ring on the anniversary of the "blood purge," the dispatch said.

Nazis Deny Story.

Berlin, June 14 (AP).—A spokesman for the propaganda ministry said tonight a Paris newspaper story that Storm Troopers had been killed by followers of the late Ernest Roehm and that Reichsfuehrer Hitler had been threatened was "nonsense."

The ministry denied the existence of any "Roehm organization," adding, "there never will be any."

It said such stories doubtless "came from a book published in Switzerland by a German immigrant called, 'I Can No Longer Keep Still.'"

Gilbert K. Chesterton Dies

Chesterton was somewhat of a puzzle in the field of English literature, but with his admirers constantly growing in numbers and his work better understood, he eventually came to be known in England as the most lovable and boyish character among British authors.

His own idea of himself was that he was born to attain fame as an artist. He made a determined effort to reach that goal by leaving St. Paul's School, where he studied as a youth, to attend the art classes at the Slade School, London. After filling the role of art critic for the Bookman for a time, he discovered that his natural bent was toward literature, and he again changed his course to devote himself to cultivating that means of expression, both in verse and prose.

Having done occasional reviewing and had some experience in a publisher's office, Chesterton in 1900 produced a volume of clever poems under the title, "The Wild Knight." It was about that time he definitely took to journalism as a career and became a regular contributor of signed articles to the liberal journals, The Speaker and the Daily News.

Personality Distinct.

From the first Chesterton established himself as a writer with a distinct personality—combative, unconventional and dogmatic—with the result that his writings were much sought and were published in some 15 London newspapers and magazines. In addition to his original style, the author attracted further attention by his versatility, his work ranging from fiction to fugitive verse and from artistic criticism to discussions of ethics and religion. His reputation was further enhanced by the republication of much of his work in a series of volumes in which his acute criticism, pungent style, humor and his capacity for laying down the law with unflagging imeptuosity stood out.

The interest excited by Chesterton's work and views was indicated by an analysis of them in an anonymous volume, "G. K. Chesterton: a criticism," published in 1908.

Chesterton was born at Kensington, London, May 29, 1874. In 1901 he married Miss Francis Blogg. They made their home at Beaconsfield, a London suburb.

During his life as a journalist Chesterton found time for longer works which early established his more serious literary reputation. Among these were "Orthodoxy," "All Things Considered," "The Ballad of the White Horse," and "The Napoleon of Notting Hill." Later came two volumes of detective stories, "The Innocense of Father Brown," and "The Wisdom of Father Brown." These were followed by what has been called the funniest of his works, "The Ball and the Cross."

In 1926 he established his own periodical, G. K.'s Weekly, to deal with contemporary literary and political affairs.

In all his fiction Chesterton, in the opinion of critics, permitted his imagination to run riot. His works, they have pointed out, are tinctured with his love of paradox, his boyish joy in saying something incongruous. On this point one critic wrote: "His topsy turvy paradoxes are an attempt to restore the world to its traditional sanity. His is the prose of a fighter; his poetry is also full of the rhetoric of battle." Another of the critics characterized Chesterton as the "prince of paradoxes," but the author disclaimed that literary honor, if it may be called that.

His reputation as a molder of paradoxes preceded Chesterton to the United States, where he made a lecture tour in 1921. After giving two or three of his lectures the author commenting upon his audiences said:

"The most widespread disappointment seems to have been given by the absence of the paradox which 'they went forth to see.' I do not understand how this kind of writing or lecturing could be looked for from me since I have protested over and over, by symbol and speech, that I should not know a paradox if it met me in the street. I have read my own books over and over again and never found a paradox."

Chesterton afterward described his American tour in a book entitled "What I Saw in America." In that he revealed himself to his audience as a portly, genial figure, with flowing hair that curved at his collar; with twinkling blue eyes and cheeks puffy and rosy like those of Santa Claus. One of his characteristic comments was made on the itinerary of his tour, which, he declared, gave him a distorted view of American geography. He had always been led to believe, he said, that Washington was close to Baltimore and actually within the confines of the State of Maryland. Thus he could not understand why, after his lecture tour in Baltimore, it was necessary to cart him clear across the State of Pennsylvania to Pittsburgh for a lecture and then back again before facing his audience in Washington. His collections of essays and fiction have had wide circulation in America and his detective stories appeared serially in American magazines.

In 1922 Chesterton became converted to the Roman Catholic faith partly through the influence of his most intimate friend, Hilaire Belloc, and afterward wrote vigorously on religious topics upholding his adopted church. Four years later his wife also became a communicant of the Catholic Church.

Chesterton was a member of the Royal Society of Literature and received an honorary degree of doctor of laws from Edinburg University.

Thousand Hear Octogenarian Preach Own Funeral Sermon

By the Associated Press.

Danville, Ill., June 14.—In a copse on his Knoll Cove farm, D. F. Bailiff, 80, preached his own "funeral services" today to an estimated 1,000 visitors who came with their basket lunches and gave a festive air to the obsequies.

"To know one's self is wisdom; to govern that self is strength."

The text, he said, "came out of my own head." A farmer, retired school teacher and widely known naturalist, Bailiff defined his creed as "Nature, there is no God but Nature."

When death comes, he told the "funeral throng," he wants friends to lift him on a pile of logs, touch a match and go away without ceremony and without weeping.

The crowd heard him through, commenting on the old man's sprightliness of manner, his feeling for diction, his definite ideas of his creed. Then they brought out the basket lunches.

Later they wandered over his land, inspecting the Indian trails and natural springs there, and visited the three-room house which Bailiff—80 years old in May—recently built himself.

He cooks in an outdoor kitchen, under the trees.

All his life, the aged man said, he has practiced "the Golden Rule as laid down by Confucius."

In his oration he told the invited funeral guests:

"In the morning of life we dance on the green hills in the eastern sunlight, looking to the west and wondering what is beyond, dreaming what we shall do when we have reached manhood and womanhood.

"At the meridian of life we are involved with business, not with the frivolities of childhood nor the peaceful rest of age.

"But as the shadows lengthen and the splendor of the noonday sun is dimmed by a slight haze, we assume a more restful attitude and gradually drift with the current of time. A few of us are privileged to glide on and on in the full course of life, gradually to sink with the setting sun in a halo of gold-lined clouds."

Stronger Stand Against Japan Urged on China

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, China, June 14.—The Canton (South China) government telegraphed the National government at Nanking an appeal today urging that the nation as a whole take a stronger attitude toward Japanese activities in China.

This message, sent by Chen Chi-Tank, Governor of Canton and military leader of Kwangtung Province, said, however, that forces of Cantonese were withdrawing from Hunan Province "for the present."

National government leaders interpreted the development as a strong indication Kwangtung Province is unwilling to continue its threat against Hunan Province, which Nanking is answering with ever-increasing military concentrations in Fukien, Kiangsi, and Hunan provinces.

Optimism Cited.

The National government believes Canton's latest action left Kwangsi Province alone to prosecute any anti-Nanking campaign. War lords of Kwangsi are believed to realize they are incapable of waging war alone.

Thus Nanking was optimistic that the southern threat is rapidly disintegrating, thereby removing the danger of civil war.

Canton's proposal that Nanking undertake a stronger Japanese policy is expected to be considered at an emergency session of the central executive committee of the Kuomintang (dominant government party) at Nanking July 10.

There, it is expected, the committee will adopt resolutions superficially in conformance with Canton's wishes, but care is expected to be taken not to bring down Japanese disapproval.

Drive Believed Halted.

Although rulers of Kwangsi Province have not yet declared an intention of following Canton's lead for negotiation with Nanking, the fact Kwangsi troops are being held on the border is taken here to indicate Kwangsi's anti-Nanking drive has been halted, at least temporarily.

Although the situation still holds grave possibilities, foreigners in Canton reported they consider the crisis has eased markedly.

The gunboat Mindanao, flagship of the United States' South China naval patrol, is at Canton, as usual. The U. S. S. Asheville, attached to the South China patrol, which has been in Shanghai for many weeks, left for Manila to be overhauled.

She is likely to make a routine call at Hong Kong. This caused unfounded rumors here that increased American naval strength is headed for South China, but naval officials here said the Asheville's departure was not threatening to Chinese affairs.

Bettors Near End Of 1,300-Mile Trek In a Wheelbarrow

A thin man with a tired face and clothes that hung loose on his body stooped his shoulders, grasped the handles tight in his hands and plodded along the highway yesterday near Fairfax, Va.

The handles he grasped belonged to a wheelbarrow. And in the wheelbarrow was another man—a chubby fellow with a jovial face.

The man who pushed was W. E. Bussey, and the man who rode was C. E. Landrum. Bussey, who is a truck farmer, had pulled Landrum 1,300 miles from Shreveport, La.

Bussey lost a bet; that's why he had to pull his friend. He bet Landrum, who is a civil engineer, that Cleveland Dear would win the Louisiana election for Governor; Landrum bet on R. W. Leache, who won. The payment was a ride in the wheelbarrow to Philadelphia, the loser doing the pulling.

Since April 1, they have been heading toward Philadelphia, to attend the Democratic convention. Bussey wore 2 pairs of shoes and innumerable half soles on the way up.

Bussey admittedly is tired of pulling and Landrum is tired of riding. Landrum said:

Mexico City Hunts Detroiter's Killer

Mrs. Diver could not be reached today. Police allowed her to return home with her 9-year-old son, Mario, and she had moved to the home of relatives today. Before her release by police, she made a statement in which she said her husband slapped her in the face following a jealous outburst, and attempted to shoot her with a pistol.

Mrs. Diver said her cousin, Gen. Lopez, who witnessed the quarrel, tried to disarm Diver, and in the struggle the American engineer was killed.

Girl Plane Pilot, 17, Dies in Texas Crash

Fort Worth, Tex., June 14 (AP).—Fort Worth's youngest airplane pilot, 17-year-old Reba Dee Gunn, died in the crash of her private plane at an emergency landing field 3 miles from the Municipal Airport today.

The girl was described by her instructor, Ed Ritchey, as "as good a student as I ever saw." She was dead when motorists who saw the yellow monoplane suddenly dive to the ground from a height of 200 feet, reached the wreckage.

A. W. Meadows, department of commerce inspector, said low flying and rough air were responsible.

Miss Gunn had about 45 hours in the air, airport attendants said.

Pope Expected To Speak Today On African War

He Will Appoint Two New Cardinals at Consistory in Vatican.

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, June 14.—Pope Pius worked today on the allocution he will deliver at a consistory tomorrow in which he may refer to the Italo-Ethiopion war.

He will create two new cardinals at the consistory. Prelates said the pontiff, who has been much perturbed by the possible consequences of the Ethiopian war on European peace, may again refer to the subject.

In a secret consistory replete with Vatican ritual he will name Mgr. Giovanni Mercati, prefect of the Vatican library and the pro-prefect of that same institution, Mgr. Eugenio Tisserant, as appointees to the rolls of the sacred college.

His last allocution was the "peace with justice" plea he made before the college of cardinals in December, 1935, when he created 20 new cardinals under the cloud of actual war in Ethiopia and a menacing situation in Europe.

In creating the two new cardinals Pope Pius will bestow princely rank on two old friends. At the same time he expects to bring the college rolls to 68.

Tomorrow, also, the Pope is expected to appoint two cardinal bishops to fill the vacancies in that order of cardinals and will formally proclaim the appointments of bishops made since his last consistory.

Among the latter to be so recognized are the Americans: Mgr. George L. Leech, named Bishop of Harrisburg, Pa.; Mgr. Hugh L. Lamb, named Auxiliary Archbishop to Cardinal Dougherty, Philadelphia; Mgr. William Adrian, named Bishop of Nashville, Tenn. The Canadians: Mgr. Francis Carrol, named Bishop of Calgary, Alberta; Father Patrick Bray, Bishop of St. John.

The new cardinals will not be present at tomorrow's ceremonies. They will wait in their hotels or homes for Vatican messengers to inform them of the honor bestowed. Late Wednesday they will be received by the Pope in an intimate ceremony to receive their "berrettas" or ecclesiastical tri-cornered hats.

Presbyterians Join 3 Pastors In Exile Order

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 14.—Members of three Presbyterian congregations joined their banished pastors today in defiance of the Presbytery of Philadelphia.

The demonstration climaxed a week-long series of incidents marked by the establishment of the Presbyterian Church of America by a group of conservative clergymen and laymen breaking away from the Presbyterian in the United States of America.

At the Central North Broad Street Presbyterian Church less than 100 persons remained in their pews while more than 700 others attended services arranged by the Rev. Merrill T. MacPherson in Lu Lu Temple, two blocks away.

Smaller walkouts occurred at the Grace Presbyterian Church and the McDowell Memorial Church.

Ministers of all three churches were dismissed from their pulpits by the Presbytery for refusing to withdraw from the Independent Board of Foreign Missions, regarded as a conservative organization.

Since then, the Rev. David Freeman, of the Grace Church, and the Rev. Theodore J. Jamsma, of the McDowell Church, joined the new Presbyterian Church of America, founded in Philadelphia on Thursday.

Dr. MacPherson has indicated that he will form an independent church modeled after the Moody Institute Church, of Chicago.

At the church he abandoned, Dr. Weaver K. Eubank, chairman of the Presbytery's committee on vacancy and supply, read the order dismissing Dr. MacPherson. Dr. Acquilla Webb, president of Washington College, Washington, Tenn., replaced him in the pulpit.

Eighty of the 105 worshippers at the Grace Church followed Mr. Freeman from the building when he called upon them to support him as the morning service opened.

They marched three blocks to the dwelling of Mrs. Eugene Hollenbach, where the service was held, Mr. Freeman in charge.

Seventeen members, including two trustees, walked out with Mr. Jamsma, who was at the pulpit fully an hour before the service was scheduled to begin, his head bowed in prayer.

"I am here to preach and here to stay until the people decide," he announced to church officials.

"I cannot obey it," he said, referring to the order banning him from the pulpit.

Notables at Jewish Congress

kind have been made, through the irony of fate, to suffer the most."

Chairman of the affair in honor of Mrs. Wise was Mrs. Falk Harmel. A vice president of the women's division, Mrs. Nathan D. Perlman, presided. Miss Leah Effenbach, Washington pianist, played two numbers.

Margoshes addressed the congress in the afternoon, urging members of his race to meet the anti-Semetic assault with an all-Jewish front.

"The idea of hiding behind a Gentile front, expecting others to do for us what we should do for ourselves is not only inconsistent with our dignity as a people but is thoroughly ineffective," the editor of The Day said.

Reliance on Self-Help.

"Much as we appreciate the help which others give us, reliance must be put, in the final analysis, on self-help. Others will follow us only if we ourselves point the way to the battle line. What is more, the world will respect us only in the degree in which we ourselves stand on our rights, prepared to fight for them to the end."

Dr. Wise the president of the National Jewish Congress, explained in his morning address that "if all the Jews in the world were in the position of the Jews in Nazi Germany no two Jews could meet together."

"And," he said, "if all the Jews of the world were as free from persecution as are the Jews in England, France and the United States, there would hardly be need for our coming together. It is because there are differences that we must unite."

The following delegates were named:

Prof. Horace M. Kallen, New York; Prof. Jerome Michael, New York; Dr. Samuel Margoshes, New York; Louis Sturz, New York; Joseph Seigler, Newark; Jacob Fishman, New York; Rabbi Edward L. 'Gossip' Slayer Ready for Prison

Elkton, Md., June 14 (AP).—Mrs. Rachel Gillespie, mother of two children, waited at the county jail today to be taken to the Maryland House of Correction to serve four years for killing a woman which gossip had linked with her husband.

Her husband, Walter Gillespie, is under $1,000 bond to keep peace and not harm her. She and her attorney, State Senator Harold E. Cobourn, of Perryville, had Gillespie arrested last week because, they said, he had terrorized her.

County officers said Gillespie was enraged because his wife would not return to him while she was waiting to begin her prison sentence.

Sane Probation System Urged By Study Group

By the Associated Press.

The Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, set up by President Roosevelt to study the prison labor problem, recommended yesterday "a sound probation system" to help solve the problem of idleness in prisons.

In its first study of State prison industries—in Maryland—the board found:

"Too many men are sent to prison. Society can be protected against many criminals by other means—provided that mechanisms are created and used under which individuals susceptible of reformation outside prison walls are selected wisely and supervised thoroughly."

The administration, headed by Judge Joseph N. Uhlman, of Baltimore, is preparing other studies of prison conditions in Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Kentucky, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia and Wyoming.

The organization also reported to Gov. Harry W. Nice that the Hawes-Cooper act, giving each State power to regulate all prison goods shipped into its boundaries, has made it necessary for State prisons to adopt the policy of manufacturing goods for use of State departments only, instead of for sale on the market.

"Because of reduced outlets for prison-made goods brought about by Federal legislation," the report finds, "the State itself is now the sole outstanding market for such products." The Hawes-Cooper act was declared constitutional by the Supreme Court this winter.

Nation's 1935 Income Put at 59 Billions

Boston, Mass., June 15.—The national income has a long way to go to reach $81,000,000,000, the high in 1929. However, the increase since the low point of 1932 has been very steady. If improvements in the first quarter of 1936 are continued, it is estimated our national income this year will be close to $59,000,000,000.

NYA Gave Aid To 8th of 1936 College Seniors

By the Associated Press.

An estimate that one-eighth of this year's college graduates completed their education supported by part-time relief jobs was made yesterday by the National Youth Administration.

"Because prospects for employment for this year's graduates are reported considerably higher than for those of the last five years, and because of the training received and scholastic records made by these 19,803 students who have received NYA aid," Aubrey Williams, NYA director, added, "we are hopeful that they will soon have full-time jobs."

President Roosevelt recently suggested that persons under 18 and over 65 be taken off the labor market to reduce unemployment. Williams etsimated that college graduates this year would total 137,000.

NYA paid undergraduates an average of $15 a month and graduate students from $25 to $30 for part-time jobs that enabled them to stay in college. A total of 138,645 college students have been partly supported by NYA during the last year. The youth aid program's work relief allotment—also designed to help high school students and industry apprentices—is to be increased from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 next year.

Williams said the NYA graduates, who made up 14.3 per cent of the college students receiving Government aid, would receive 16,574 bachelor degrees, 1,601 M. A.'s, 175 Ph. D's, while 1,273 were studying law, medicine and other professional subjects.

New York, including 1,221 in New York City, had 2,002 NYA students receiving bachelor degrees, and was followed by Pennsylvania with 1,211. Nevada, with 7, had the smallest number.

5 Wounded in Palestine; Arab Strike Continues

Five Jews were wounded in two attacks by sniping Arabs on the Jaffa highway and the Jericho road. Troops escorting a Jewish convoy returned the fire.

(Civil courts were empowered to impose the death penalty for a number of offenses, including the throwing of bombs, firing on troops or interfering with activities at harbors or railroads. Arabs have begun the ninth week of a strike against Jewish immigration, attended by disorders which have taken nearly 100 lives.)

Baron Aloisi Resigns Italian Foreign Post

Rome, June 14 (AP).—Baron Pompeo Aloisi, who represented Italy as delegate to the League of Nations, presented his resignation to Premier Mussolini today as chief functionary of the foreign office.

Il Duce thanked Aloisi for his services at Geneva and announced the Baron would continue to serve the foreign office.

Well informed sources characterized the change as a "normal" move hinging upon the appointment of Count Galeazzo Ciano, Premier Mussolini's son-in-law, as minister of foreign affairs. They added it does not necessarily mean Aloisi would relinquish his post as delegate to Geneva.

Pilot Falls to Death When Parachute Fails

Aberdeen, Wash., June 14 (AP).—Leland Pinkham, 30, of Aberdeen, fell to his death here today when his parachute failed to open after he bailed out of a spinning airplane.

Pinkham, who held a limited commercial license, was flying at an altitude of about 4,000 feet when the plane apparently developed motor trouble. He stayed with the plane until he maneuvered it away from the residential district and then bailed out, but was too close to the ground for his parachute to open.

Death Takes One In Suicide Tryst

Sweethearts for 30 years, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hodgen, 1832 Columbia road northwest, were parted by death yesterday after they had tried to die together.

Dolly Hodgen, 60, died in Gallinger Hospital from the effects of illuminating gas. Her husband, Thomas, 65, who was taken to the hospital with her from their apartment Friday, will not die, physicians reported.

According to the police, the couple was found unconscious sitting side by side in their gas-filled kitchen. Several jets were found open on the stove by Mary E. Fiol, a roomer.

The two were given artificial respiration by the Fire rescue squad and later taken to Emergency Hospital. They were transferred to the charity hospital Saturday.

A note was found on a desk in the living room of the apartment. It told how the Hodgens were married 30 years ago. "And we have been sweethearts ever since," it read.

The tale was told of having owned a well paying business, and of its gradual decline during the depression with the subsequent moving from an exclusive neighborhood to a poorly furnished two-room flat.

Finally, the note read, both were stricken with ill health. They had no money. They wanted to die together.

Mrs. Hodgen's body was taken to the District Morgue. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald will perform an autopsy today.

Hospital Claims Hay Fever Cure

London, June 14 (AP).—A new 98 per cent successful cure for hay fever was claimed today by the physiotherapy department of St. George's Hospital after five years of intensive research and experimentation.

The treatment, which was published, consists of the electrical application of a coating of ionized zinc to sensitive tissues of the nostrils by a process similar to electroplating.

Immunity for the hay fever season was claimed to be obtained from three treatments and permanent immunity from treatments at the beginning of two successive seasons.

"Some 200 cases were treated in the last five years with almost complete success," one of the doctors of the hospital stated. He added that many of those treated found as a consequence they were less subject to winter colds.

Light Rather Than Heat.

Gov. Landon's assurance that his campaign will be a hard but fair fight is a logical sequence to his telegram to the Republican National Convention. In that message he manifested his determination to be entirely candid and fair with the party which was about to nominate him. Likewise, he displayed a keen sense of obligation to adhere to platform pledges. It is safe to assume, therefore, that his promise to fight hard, but always fairly, is equally sincere and will be equally effective.

There is a strong suggestion in Mr. Landon's statement that he does not intend to strike out blindly at everything the New Deal has attempted to do. Some of the Administration's objectives are not partisan issues. On many points where political differences have arisen they center upon methods rather than objectives. For example, there will be little said during the campaign as to whether social security is desirable, but numerous debates will be waged on how it should be attained. In discussions of this kind the urgent need of light and not heat is obvious.

Moreover, the campaign will involve some issues of tremendous importance. Among these is the basic question as to whether desirable economic and social adjustments shall be sought through State or national legislation. The future of the country may be profoundly affected by the outcome of this struggle between the forces of centralization and those of local self-government. Certainly this is an issue which should be presented to the people with the utmost fairness and candor. To smear it over with evasive propaganda and mudslinging would be an insult to the intelligence of American voters as well as a grave disservice to the country.

The pledge of Gov. Landon that his campaign will be conducted fairly has been especially emphasized because of its sharp contrast with Postmaster General Farley's prediction of "the dirtiest campaign" in many years. The Governor's stand should make it easy for Mr. Farley to reverse that forecast. Indeed, with Mr. Farley directing the New Deal campaign, and with the G. O. P. candidate disavowing any intention of hitting below the belt, the Postmaster General could scarcely stand upon his prediction without arousing a rather embarrassing personal implication.

The Angelo Herndon Case.

There is little surprise in the ruling of the Georgia Supreme Court that an insurrection law of 1871 violates neither the State nor Federal Constitutions. The statute defines "any attempt, by persuasion or otherwise, to induce others to join in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the State" as an attempt to incite insurrection. Under these terms, Angelo Herndon, Negro, was indicted in Atlanta in 1932 and sentenced to 18 years in the chain gang. He had been arrested on "suspicion" of being a Communist organizer. A quantity of propaganda supporting communism was found in his room. Herndon confessed readily to his communist sympathies but added that his zeal went no further than to preach his beliefs.

Rallying to his defense several liberal organizations, Herndon challenged the constitutionality of his conviction, first in the State Supreme Court and then in the United States Supreme Court. In both he pleaded abridgment of his constitutional rights without due process of law. From both came the reply that judgment was impossible because the point had not been raised at the proper time during the trial, though a minority of three in the higher court dissented in the belief that "the great securities of the Constitution" may be "lost in a web of procedural entanglements."

Habeas corpus proceedings were next begun on the argument that the State had failed to show a clear and present danger resulting from the defendant's activities. It was further submitted that while Herndon's case was pending, the official ballots of Georgia had carried the names of Communist candidates and that Herndon's efforts in campaigning for them could not have been so subversive as the action of the State itself. The plea was granted and Herndon released under $7,000 bond provided by the International Labor Defense. The judge, in handing down his decision, explained that the insurrection law had been passed to hold in check any who might have attempted to stir up the newly freed slaves of 1871 and that it was unconstitutional as applied to Herndon's case because it was too vague.

The State immediately filed a bill of exceptions and the Georgia Supreme Court unanimously reversed the habeas corpus decision. Once more the case will be carried to the United States Supreme Court. If the insurrection law, as alleged, makes the mere holding of political beliefs a crime, a reversal of the Georgia judgment seems foreordained.

Rising Governmental Costs.

On the basis of official data covering Federal, State and local governments, the National Industrial Conference Board estimates that public expenditures totaled $14,449,000,000 in 1934—the last fiscal year for which comprehensive returns are available. However, we know that Federal expenditures have continued to rise since then, and will reach a record high figure for the current year with cash payments of the bonus added to outlays already above the level of the preceding year.

Expenditures, not taxes, are the really significant measure of the cost of government to the people. Taxes rise or fall with changing business conditions and modification of revenue laws. A country like the United States, which is spending more than it receives from both taxes and other sources of revenue, may temporarily bridge the gap between income and outgo by borrowing. The resultant increase in the public debt, however, becomes a charge upon future generations. Moreover, the sums borrowed divert a certain amount of the people's saved income from alternative forms of productive employment. Thus, directly and indirectly, the people pay ultimately for governmental unwillingness or inability to cover current outlays by taxes.

It is, therefore, a matter of deep concern to note that in 1934, the total volume of public spending for all governmental activities equaled nearly 29 per cent of the national income—then estimated to approximate $50,000,000,000. In that year, taxes amounted to $8,767,000,000, or 17.5 per cent of national income, the highest percentage recorded during the thirteen years covered by the Conference Board report. Since State and local expenditures showed a declining trend in 1931 and subsequent years, the rapid increase in governmental costs is attributable to Federal expenditures which rose from 26 per cent of all governmental outlays in 1929 to 47 per cent in 1934.

Even making liberal allowance for private income gains and for recoverable public outlays, it is plainly evident that government spending—Federal, State and local—absorbs an appallingly large proportion of the people's income. Soon or late, the present scale of expenditure will have to be drastically cut, since we cannot continue to meet huge deficits by borrowing. Neither can we afford to extract many more billions in taxes from families already surrendering close to one-fifth of their total income to Federal, State and municipal tax collectors.

A comprehensive survey like that of the National Industrial Conference Board emphasizes the need for economy much more forcibly than studies dealing solely with Federal budgetary problems. It shows the size of the total tax burden and indicates how wide is the gap between all governmental receipts and expenditures. If that gap is to be closed without seriously crippling economic progress, expenditures must be cut and we must at the same time try to adjust tax increases in accord with ability to pay.

This task calls for a thorough overhauling of the Federal tax system and better co-ordination of national, State and local revenue laws. So far, the Administration has shown little interest in furthering either of these much needed reforms.

A Constructive Decision.

The New York State Supreme Court has upheld the right of foreign holders of American corporation bonds carrying an optional currency clause to demand payment of interest in guilders, which have appreciated about 69 per cent, in terms of the dollar. The ruling follows a similar decision handed down by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals nearly a year ago in a suit brought against the St. Louis & Southwestern Railway. As the United States Supreme Court recently refused to review the latter decision, it remains the authoritative judicial opinion on the question at issue.

Cases of this sort provide outstanding examples of the evil effects of currency manipulation, which are not so apparent when both parties to a contract live in the same country. When payments due a foreigner are drawn in terms of dollars, for instance, any reduction in the gold value of the dollar will result in losses to either debtor or creditor. In the present case, the court has decreed that the loss due to dollar devaluation shall be borne by the debtor corporation. Under the terms of the original contract it is called upon to make payment in a specified number of gold guilders without allowance for the changed value of the dollar.

Optional currency clauses afford much-needed protection to foreign investors and it is extremely important that the courts should uphold them. The chances of loss are greatly minimized when the lender has the right to demand payment in a number of currencies instead of being forced to rely upon the stability of the monetary system of a single country. The monetary demoralization of recent years has dealt a severe blow to investment confidence and emphasized the need for protective devices of this sort as an aid to a sound nonspeculative revival of international lending.

Debts Are Not The Issue.

Today payments totaling nearly $200,000,000 are due on war debt account from 13 European countries. All of them, excepting Finland—which has consistently met its obligations in full, are expected to continue in default, bringing total payments in arrears up to the huge sum of $1,160,000,000.

The defaulting nations show no inclination to discuss new debt settlements at this time, despite the announced willingness of the State Department to receive proposals. Although the new French Government has expressed hope that the difficulties involved in the question of debt may be overcome in the near future, it declines as firmly as preceding governments to reopen that question at the present time. The British note is even less encouraging, rejecting our tentative advances with the brusque assertion that the reasons for suspending payments in 1934 "are unfortunately no less valid now than they were then."

In view of the unyielding attitude of our chief debtors, it is not surprising to hear that the Republican platform declaration pledging the party to use every effort to collect war debts has evoked no favorable response abroad. The debtor countries are chiefly interested in knowing whether our commercial and tariff policies will provide a basis for future payments by admitting a larger volume of imports. No amount of collecting zeal or indignation will bring tangible results, if this country adopts an isolationist policy and shuts out goods offered in payment of debts.

On the other hand, American tariff policies are necessarily influenced by those of other nations. So long as trade throughout the world is throttled by highly protective duties and import quotas, and hampered by unstable exchanges, conditions will remain unfavorable to resumption of debt negotiations.

Emphasis should be placed at the moment upon the necessity of removing abnormal restrictions upon foreign trade and reintroducing currency stability. With these objectives achieved or on the way to being realized, it would become possible for our debtors to decide how much they could pay and whether such sums could be transferred without upsetting the balance of international payments and again demoralizing the exchanges.

Off To Summer Camp.

Comes now the season of two blankets (woolen), six pairs of socks (long), poncho or raincoat, heavy sneakers, bathing suit, flashlight with extra batteries, etc. The Nation's boys and girls are off for summer camp. From coast to coast and Gulf to border, youth is fleeing the routine of school, the dominance of adults, the stiff formalisms of city life.

Whether their escape leads to a world of far-away luxury or nearby simplicity depends on the pocketbooks of their parents, for camps are divided into private and organizational categories. But the theory behind the most exclusive camp differs little from that behind the establishment run by charity or public funds.

In forest or mountains, on seashore or lakefront, the aim is always to allow boys and girls to do those things which they most desire, but which, for a variety of reasons, have been denied them. Accordingly, girls will play baseball while boys will flock to carefully supervised rifle ranges, and all alike will swim, ride, climb and sail to heart's content. Then, drowsed by the air and sun, they will gather in the evening to learn the mysterious effect which fire, from time immemorial, has worked on Man clustered with his friends in the dark.

Camps are peculiar to this country. Their origin dates back as far as the '80s but it was not until after the war that they began to take on their present popularity. Concentration of people in cities and the growth of artificial amusements have pushed further and further into the background the fundamentals of living. Summer camps thus became the answer to the cries of young animal spirits pining for a chance to express themselves naturally.

This year between two and three million children are expected by the camps. In the enthusiasm of youth for these institutions may lie a good part of the reason why America to date has avoided such organizations as Hitler's Jugend or the Balilla of Mussolini.

On a radio program it was asked, "Who is the worse liar—a fisherman or a golfer?" A fisherman is, because a golfer can improve his lie.

Except for 270 lawyers, businessmen make up the largest group in the House of Representatives. There are 68 of them, including 17 manufacturers, 16 bankers, 12 real estate operators, 9 merchants, 8 insurance men and 6 contractors.

Farmers and stockmen make the next considerable group, 27, of whom 4 are engaged exclusively in livestock production.

Newspaper editors and publishers make up the next largest group. There are 21 of them, and their publications, including dailies and weeklies, have an estimated combined circulation of 2,000,000.

These major groups account for 386 seats in the House, leaving 49 for all other arts, crafts, trades and professions. There are two actors, three preachers, two professional economists, one locomotive engineer, three railway trainmen, six school teachers, one hotel owner, one director of athletics, one radio announcer, three professional labor leaders, two social workers and one baseball player.

Federal Labor Supervision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Out of the turmoil of adjectives hurled by orators addressing the Republican convention comes the realization that the party leaders of the G. O. P. are presenting a strictly negative viewpoint. If the Republican Party expects to achieve the political leadership of the Nation it must first evolve a better solution of the country's problems than the present Administration favors. The Republican nominee must realize that once in the White House, a constructive program rather than a minus quantity is an absolute necessity.

The great problem is to open opportunities for the unemployed, an issue which the G. O. P. has avoided to date. One hint that the party has given to the Nation, however, is the proposed amendment to the Constitution, delegating to the States the power to control minimum hours and wages for labor.

This amendment is misleading, in view of the fact that mere State control would probably prove inadequate. It is an attempt to satisfy two great elements—Labor and Big Business.

We may take two progressive States which would naturally attempt to enact laws creating as high as possible wages. One of these might contain a more dominant group of leaders who would be capable of forcing through a lower wage minimum than the other, therefore underselling the latter's products and possibly undermining its enterprises.

This would, of course, give rise to monopolies, formed within certain States by manufacturers who possessed the capital to establish their business within these States, allowing one State to place the other in a veritable condition of bankruptcy.

When this fact is recognized by the victimized State it would naturally attempt to lower its laws to meet those of the other State, thereby creating continual animosity between States and hardships for the workers. Federal control would naturally equalize laws and tend to discourage extremely low wages.

Senator's Stricture.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has no doubt occurred to many that whether the G. O. P. noticeably "blacks the board" in the pending campaign, depends largely upon the reaction of the party and Senator Borah to Gov. Landon's kite-tail grab for the gold standard plank, and potential needed constitutional revisions.

The terse comment of the Senator upon receiving news at Akron en route home of the Governor's eleventh-hour message viz., "he should have sent it sooner," sounds forbidding and forboding," has all the earmarks of a "multum in parvos" criticism emanating as it does from the real head of the party, the brains of the crowd. It spoke volumes. It implied that this had all been gone into before he withdrew from the race, pledged his cooperation, and left the convention.

The trouble with the Senator is that although he knows all about the Government, Constitution included, he doesn't know enough about politics to avoid a trap (if it was a trap) like this, that stuck out like the shopworn sore thumb. That the Governor was trying to overreach doesn't comport with his character. However, the electorate is doubtless interested to know the full implication of the sage Senator's sentiment stricture, "he should have sent it sooner."

Motorists' Tocsin.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How long are the people in Washington going to put up with the ridiculous traffic conditions here? Especially with the parking restrictions, which, in view of the widest streets in the world, is beyond comprehension. When are the people going to put some of the energy they use in racing out of buildings and stores and such places to move cars every hour and demand that the parking bans be lifted to something reasonable? As there are not enough parking lots, in the first place, not to mention the fact of having to pay to park in order to make purchases in the stores, which increases the tax and discourages buying unless absolutely necessary, this certainly should be an incentive to the merchants at least to help the motorist to fight the dominating forces who make these stupid regulations.

Have you or any of the traffic commissioners ever been on Constitution avenue and Twelfth street around 4:30 to 5 p. m.? It is disgraceful the way cars are tied up for two blocks while one or two cars, maybe a bus, makes a left turn while the whole block ahead is clear. What are we motorists going to do about it? I have asked dozens of them, and all say the same thing—"Oh, we can't do anything about it." Are we going to sit down and take it and like it or shall we all get together and make a concerted and constructive effort to have these and many other conditions remedied? Wake up, motorists!

The Need For Coal Control.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Any act or proposed legislation of whatever nature relative to an industry must unquestionably possess very substantial merit, if 75 to 80 per cent of its productive capacity and 100 per cent of it employes supported the act and recommend the passage of the proposed legislation.

To my mind it is very significant that by far the greater portion of the producers of coal, who fought the act and are against the proposed legislation, are the largest units in the industry and heretofore have been, as it were, dictators of "coal" in that they have set the price, always low and often below their own cost of production, for the others in the business to follow; the smaller units of this group are simply in the position of the tail where "the dog wags the tail."

Minimum price fixing in the proposed legislation is very limited in that the competition of other sources of power and heat must be met and the minimum set is the actual total cost of production and selling; the consumer is well taken care of by the authority given to the commission to set a maximum price in times of abnormaly high markets as well as by a consumer's council created by the bill.

Coal has a very unique position in our industry. It is the power behind the network of our carriers; it produces a great portion of our electric power and light and produces it cheaper than water; it is the very heart of our great steel mills; its by-products can and do take the place of a great many articles derived from other natural resources—supplies of which are limited—and furnish a great many articles used in the arts, sciences and other branches of commerce. In fact it is the very keystone of the arch of American industry.

Government statistics indicate that there are many hundreds years of supply of coal in our country, but, unfortunately, the supply of cheaply-mined high grade steam, bi-products and metallurgical coal is limited. Already the exhausion of this easily and economically minable supply of high grade coal can be seen in the not very distant future.

There are two stages of coal mining. The first is when the coal is mined from the entries and rooms; the second stage is when the coal is mined from the pillars. The first is cheaper than the second, but the second process must be carried out if we wish to make a proper recovery. The method used in the first stage is as important as the method used in the second stage to obtain maximum recovery, in fact, the first can be carried on in such a cheap way that it is, practically speaking, impossible to draw the coal remaining in the pillars.

Cheap prices, or prices below a reasonable cost of production, necessitates cheap mining, thus resulting in system of first mining that prevents any recovery of coal in the second stage. That is just what has actually happened in the industry. All available statistics show that the curve of percentage recovery has followed consistently the curve of the realization per ton.

It is impossible for the States to enact uniform control of the industry as is clearly demonstrated by the failure of the attempt to do so by some of them. Chiseling prices prevent the producers, even if inclined to do so, from proper mining to insure reasonable recovery—the last resort and the only cure is national legislation.

It seems to me that there should be no argument as to the necessity for proper conservation of our coal and I can see no valid reason, from the written word of our Constitution, why the Federal Government, for the public welfare, can not step in, where the States can not control and have no power, and save this destruction of coal.

Certainly, if this is done, generations yet unborn will arise and call those blessed who accomplish this end.

Parking Meters.

The first day's collections from the 260 downtown parking meters was $76.10.

Thirteen dollars remained in the machines, making $89.10 placed in them by parkers. The last nickel inserted remains in the machine. The collections were started at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

A sealed tube containing the nickels were taken from each machine and replaced by an empty tube. The containers were taken to the office of Maurice Carey, city treasurer, and emptied. The collections were made by Edward Gunneen of the city treasurer's office; Herbert P. Davis, of the public works department, and W. R. McIlvaine, an employe of the parking meter company.

Mr. McIlvaine said the receipts were good for the first day's operation, the average being slightly more than 34 cents for each machien.

The debut of the meters was not altogether successful, as the first 260 machines had been installed in the night. The clock mechanism of some of the meters temporarily failed to function. A traffic policeman said a woman had deposited four nickels without starting the meter.

Sergt. Fred Dobbs, in charge of the downtown traffic squad, said 20 traffic tickets were issued yesterday to cars at meter parking places. About 100 tickets were issued for parking violations elsewhere. The usual number previously issued a day averaged about 200.

Drivers who received traffic tickets yesterday had parked longer than ten minutes overtime. Beginning today, only three minutes' grace will be allowed.

Some Dumb Animals

THERE are no more self-revealing stories than those told by animal lovers about animals. Knock the "I" out of them and you deprive them of their principal feature. And this is the most natural thing in the world. You can't glorify a dog without casting a little reflected glory on the man who possesses his devotion. There is a feeling, quite unwarranted, that there must be some good in the man or the dog would not like him. Every good dog feeds the ego of his owner. No wonder the man struts.

Take the case of Casual Smith, a good enough man in his way, but apt to be a little boresome at times. To hear him talk you'd think he'd always loved animals, but such is not the case. He was born in a large city and never had any pets. If he was kind to animals when he met them it was because he was afraid of them.

Now, while it is quite true that all animals instinctively know when persons fear them, it is not true that this knowledge always begets antagonism. Curiously enough, it was a horse, and not a dog, that brought this home to Casual Smith.

It was Smith's first experience of country life and the horse, which belonged to a neighbor, grazed daily near his home. One day the neighbor sent a little colored boy to get the beast, and some motion the animal made frightened the wee chap. Casual felt it was up to him to help. And so he did, and I give him credit in the circumstances. He put the harness where it belonged under the child's direction, with a great show of being at his ease, but as a matter of fact he was scared stiff. And the horse knew it, and was amused rather than revolted.

Yes, sir, that horse had a sense of humor. Thereafter he trailed Smith daily, walking after him with his great head over Casual's shoulder. It amused everybody; everybody, that is, but Smith. He was worried sick. He never knew the moment the horse would give some new manifestation of equine humor. Good old Bucephalus! He was an instruction to Casual Smith.

* * *

It was only after he had soundly thrashed a couple of them that Casual developed affection for dogs. He had a nondescript pooch he called Jack who had for a friend a magnificent collie whose home was a mile way. One day the pair tackled a tom turkey, recently purchased, and had nearly killed the bird when Smith arrived. Angry enough to overcome the fear that might otherwise have beset him he gave both animals a severe beating.

He returned to the city a week later to be gone a year. During that week the collie fawned on him whenever they met, but Jack wouldn't go near him. He just stood afar off and wagged his tail. He bore no ill will, but he was taking no chances. When Smith came back to the country at last Jack, long the property of a colored family, behaved in exactly the same way. But the collie was Smith's friend.

It was thus the education of Smith began. He learned that dogs have personalities.

* * *

In the years that followed Smith had several dogs. Heck was the first, though he ought not to count. He adopted the Smith's. They never owned him. Heck would stay a week or a month, acting as though he owned the place, and would then depart. Sometimes a small colored boy would arrive at the house, footsore and weary, to ask respectfully if he might have his dog, and would take it away with him.

It was being shamed before a pup that broke Heck's heart at last. He had been showing off; walking over a precarious bit of breakwater, brush between stakes, at the mouth of the creek; and it was after he had reached a comparitively safe and easy place to travel that he stumbled and fell into the water. Everybody laughed and the pup barked delightedly. Heck just turned a sad face to them and then ambled off to be seen no more.

Bing the First arrived under false pretenses, a little roly-poly pup, carried by Eph. "What do you call him, Eph?" Mrs. Smith asked, knowing what Eph's instructions had been. Eph smiled a little strangely and said at last, "I calls him Flora." So they called "him" Bing.

Bing was an understanding dog. She knew what she ought to do and what she ought not to do, and did them both. She never failed to chase a car even when Smith called to her, and never failed to go right back to him to be switched. It was never much of a switching. I'll give him that much. How could it be in the circumstances?

* * *

Bing the Second, the fattest and slowest pup in the last litter of Bing the First, was so lazy that Smith refused to part with him. "There's something about him that appeals to me," he said. He called him the Ice Wagon and had no other name for him until he became an orphan. And, instead of growing up as indolent and easy-going as expected, he became nervous as a cat and temperamental as his mother. He is a whale of a big dog and a fearsome beast when he barks and jumps at you.

Casual Smith grows lyrical when he talks of Bing. "Why, that pup," says he "actually begs to be tied up at night!"

This truth is not wholly unconnected with the arrival of supper, but Casual does not dwell on that fact.

What I don't understand is what dogs see in men to make them so devoted. Perhaps the title of this story should be "Some Very Dumb Animals." GRIF ALEXANDER.

Cleveland.

The hoarse and weary Republicans are scattering toward their homes at this writing, and the hall where they ratified the instructions received by phone from the hotel rooms is now in the hands of the wreckers and sweepers. From now on the patriots will apply themselves to the task of selling Alf Landon's personality and explaining the state of mind of Kansas and the historical and other influences which have produced it.

Mr. Landon is the first nominee from his fork of the creek and, though he seems hardly likely to turn the rascals out this time, his campaign should serve to acquaint the East with the nature of a hard-bitten, horny-handed breed of insurgents who have always been left wing in the Republican Party. Kansas is hearsay country to many Americans, who judge it solely by such manifestations as Carrie Nation, prohibition and the anticigarette law, which used to irritate but amuse persons going through on the trains.

The orators and writers of the Landon campaign undoubtedly will interpret the Kansan to a large element of his fellow Americans who have hitherto been inclined to regard him principally as an ornery meddler who didn't enjoy fun himself and therefore resented the pleasure of Eastern people who liked to take a drop now and again. There is that quality in his character, inherited from his Massachusetts forebears, but there is more to him than that.

• • • •

The Kansan of the present has a much more accurate measure of the Eastern American than the Easterner has of him. Kansans go East, but Easterners never go to Kansas, except of necessity. Kansas has no beaches, theaters or mountains, and hundreds of thousands of persons have crossed the State without ever setting foot on Kansas soil.

There is always a possibility that the brakeman's cry of "All aboard!" might be unheard and that a New Yorker might be left stranded in the town which bears the mocking name of Garden City or in Newton.

It has been a long time since there was a frontier anywhere in the East, but the grandparents of the present generation of Kansans were sod-hut people, many of whom were born without the assistance of doctors, and the population still knows by personal experience a number of inconveniences which are only newspaper talk to the East. Blizzards, drought, the scorching heat of summer, cyclones and grasshoppers are some that come to mind. And, as if there weren't already enough irritations in the life of the Kansan, a new one is invented for his special discomfort when his farm suddenly blew away on the wind. His farm just blew away.

• • • •

A few years ago, in Washington, your correspondent discovered on the menu of the hotel a steak listed at $4 the same day that a letter came from a friend in the town of Soldier, Kans., telling of a Kansan who had just been compelled to sell a whole cow, complete with cowhide, in good condition, steaks, tripes, stew meat, liver and one set of horns, for $5 because there wasn't enough water for her. True, the steak in Washington was a two-passenger steak, but still there was a rather unreasonable mark-up between the producer and the consumer.

Chickens were a nickel apiece in Kansas at the time, and chicken salad was $1.50 in a large hotel in New York. The Kansan who wrote the letter complained, but only with gentle resignation, that the Kansans weren't getting enough for cows and chicken and the counter-complaint that Eastern people were paying too much for them was no answer.

During the convention your correspondent renewed old friendship with Mr. Jesse Harper, the old Notre Dame football coach who preceded Knute Rockne. Mr. Harper is a Kansas farmer, and he was all for turning the rascals out of Washington next fall, even though he had been in receipt of certain checks from the United States Government for preventing wheat on his acres. Even if this Democratic prosperity were good he wouldn't like it. It is the Kansas temperament.

• • • •

There was another Jess in the sport industry some years ago who faithfully interpreted Kansas to the East and made few friends because he wasn't a good fellow. That was Jess Willard, who made two fortunes in the ring and established a reputation for frugality second only to that of the man who beat him last—Luis Angel Firpo.

Mr. Jack Skelly, of Yonkers, N. Y., who trained Willard for the Firpo fight, reported afterward that his reward had been nothing more than the gloves Willard wore in losing the fight. He thought he should have had more, but Willard's idea of the value of a dollar had been acquired on a Kansas farm, and he looked on the task of training a former champion as mere recreation. And, anyway, there was the honor.

Mr. Willard wasn't a good fellow, but he was a real Kansan. Mr. Landon may not be elected, but he might be, and your correspondent therefore hopes he is not a good fellow, either.

The champion political good fellows of the present generation have been Jimmy Walker, Warren G. Harding and James A. Farley. The citizens will be paying for their open-handedness for many a year.

Arms And Diplomacy

War Budgets Soar On Specious Argument That Spending Aids Jobless; Leaders Lacking to Keep 'Defense' Plans Peaceful.

By Barnet Nover.

IN THE nineteenth century, according to the London Economist, armaments consumed an average of betwene 1½ and 2 per cent of the national income of Great Britain and other European nations. From our point of view these sums were relatively modest. In 1888, following a period which, as a result of Bismarck's growing fears of war, had seen a sharp increase in the size of the German army, Germany's total expenditures for military purposes amounted to $185,600,000, which is less than that now being spent by any of the major powers for their air forces alone. But even in those days the burden of armaments aroused bitter complaints.

One recalls with what enthusiasm the disingenuous proposal (as it has since been proved) of the Russian Czar for the calling of an international conference at The Hague to consider disarmament and related questions was approved by public opinion in Great Britain and other nations.

Today the percentage of the national income of Great Britain devoted to armaments is around 4½, and, as a result of the current rearmament program, is expected to touch 6 per cent in two years. This means, the Economist estimates, that by 1938 every family of five in Great Britain will, on an average, be forced to contribute no less than $100 annually for the maintenance of Britain's defense forces. Nor does this take into account the staggering sums being spent in payment for past wars.

What is true for Great Britain is true also for practically every other nation. Here in the United States, for instance, the appropriations just voted by Congress for the upkeep of the Army and Navy, including engineering projects under their supervision, total approxima $1,000,000,000, which is more than was spent by any pre-war American Government for all its needs. And if the defense budgets of such nations as Germany, Japan, France, Italy and Russia are, in dollars, less than ours, in proportion to their respective national incomes they are greater. In the case of Japan the current fiscal year will see half of the government's entire income, whether from taxes or borrowed, spent for war preparation.

Wild Spending Excused By Re-employment Gains.

IN JUSTIFICATION of this mad orgy of spending for rearmament, it it being argued that money is not really being wasted; that the construction of additional forts, barracks and batleships and the governmental orders for rifles, shells, cannon, tanks, tractors, airplanes and uniforms provide work directly and indirectly for tens of thousands who otherwise would be unemployed, and that the number of jobless is further reduced, and at a low average cost, by putting a large number of men into military and naval uniforms.

But this argument is both specious and dangerous. It is doubtful, as more and more Americans are coming to believe, whether any nation, even the richest, can spend itself into prosperity. And even if it could be proved that governmental priming of the economic pump is economically sound, it is certainly open to question whether the way to do so is by ordering new armament. For, as the Economist's estimates indicate, the god of armaments is a jealous god, who insists on being propitiated by ever-increasing offerings; his appetite grows hugely with every eating.

As Harold Butler, director of the International Labor Office, pointed out in his last annual report, the prosperity that rests on the unstable foundations of rearmament in "hollow and unreal." As a form of national expenditure, he has pointed out, "it is sterile and unproductive."

Arms Not Only Dangerous But Wastefully Unproductive.

THE DISTURBING effect of this race in armaments on the course of international relations is too well known to need much emphasis. Increased expenditures for armies, navies and air forces have been a cause as well as an effect of heightened tensions and mounting fears in the world. But the social consequences of this concentration of the productive energies of the leading powers on unproductive purposes are equally vicious. In some countries this tendency has led to drastic regimentation of finance, commerce and industry. Everywhere it has meant diverting funds that are badly needed for education, social welfare and relief to other, less desirable uses. And the worst of it is that the world appears to be nowhere near the peak of its efforts to re-arm.

But perhaps the most disturbing aspect of this increase in the expenditure for armaments is that it has met with such surprisingly little opposition. That this is the case in dictatorial countries is understandable, for with the press controlled by the regime, with free speech non-existent, with all opposition parties under a ban, absence of criticism is taken for granted. Yet in democratic countries, too, the same general situation exists. As fears of war have grown even those political parties which formerly fought tooth and nail against an increase in the burden of armaments have subsided into sullen silence.

In this country the Army and Navy budgets passed both houses of Congress by huge majorities after practically no debate. In Great Britain the once vehement opposition of the Liberals and Laborites has become little more than perfunctory. Those parties now accept the evil situation with fatalistic calm. To a degree comfort is even taken in the thought that once Great Britain has become stronger on land, sea and air it will be in a better position than now to support the collective system. Privately some spokesmen for the former pacifist elements go so far as to say: "We are glad the rearmament program is being carried out, but we are not sorry the responsibility for it rests not on our shoulders, but on those of the Tories."

In France even the Socialists and Communists, who once voted regularly against all defense budgets, now favor increased armaments. Their hostility to Nazi Germany has made them fervid nationalists, eager to secure the republic against the threat from across the Rhine. And a similar situation obtains everywhere.

Do Foreign Offices Understand Military?

IN ALL countries those who business is to prepare for war have been given a free hand. It is to be presumed that from a technical point of view they know what they are about. Yet armies, navies and air forces do not exist in a vacuum. Primarily they are instruments of national policy. Is it then equally true that those who are entrusted with the responsibility of formulating policy know what they are about?

Unfortunately this is not the case, least of all in the peaceful, democratic nations. Responding to blind instincts, those nations as well as the others, are straining every nerve to prepare themselves for war. But to what purpose and in what manner the armies, navies and air forces are to be employed is anything but clear. To be sure, statesmen of every nation swear to high heaven that the purpose is only one of defense. But "defense" all too often has proved to be a term of great elasticity.

"Defense policy," the Economist rightly points out, "cannot even be safely considered apart from foreign policy; and the (British) government's defense policy therefore stands or falls by their foreign policy. But what is their foreign policy? We wish to know."

This same despairing cry will find an echo, expressed or stifled, in every country in the world.

Payment Gratifies LegionCommander

Indianapolis, June 14 (AP).—Ray Murphy, American Legion national commander, on the eve of distribution of the bonus bonds, said today: "There is little that may or should be said on this occasion other than to express again our natural satisfaction that the last chapter in the long fight to obtain common justice for the men who bore arms for America in the World War now has been written."

"The American Legion," he added, "composed as it is solely of those who served in the armed forces of our country during the fighting days of the war, brought forward the proposition of adjusting the wartime service pay because it was convinced that it was right and in keeping with the treatment our Government previously had accorded contractors and civilian employes who did not share the hazards of the soldiers, sailors and marines."

In other words, for every man employed on the site of these projects there are between four and five men employed off the site in mines, manufacturing plants and transportation."

Ickes said that to date about $1,352,000,000 of the money allotted to the PWA has been expended for materials and supplies. He said the larger part of this sum has gone to direct labor. He added that the local contribution to every one of the more than 8,000 non-Federal projects constructed by PWA has been considerably more than the amount granted by the Federal Government.

The PWA in its three years has made grants totaling $12,583,501.

The NRA and the PWA constituted the bulk of the original Roosevelt program to solve the unemployment problem. It soon became evident, however, that neither was going to make a very large dent in the problem, with the result that the huge relief program, overshadowing anything the Federal Government has ever done, was undertaken.

$11,000,000,000 Spent.

This included the CWA, the CCC, the FERA, and now the biggest of all, the Works Progress Administration, for which new funds of $1,425,000,000 are being asked. In all, the Administration in three years has spent in the neighborhood of $11,000,000,000 in its recovery and relief attempts.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation worked along with the other recovery organizations in assisting in the refinancing of distressed home mortgages. It is now settling down to the job of collecting about $3,000,000,000 loaned to more than 1,000,000 home owners. Although it is making no more loans and expects to make none, the fact that it expects to remain in existence for many years is attested by the construction of a $1,500,000 office building for its use near the Capitol.

As a further aid to home building, the Federal Housing Administration was organized for the purpose of insuring mortgage loans to home owners.

The Building of the Super Ship.

(After Longfellow.)

Build me big, O worthy master!
Tall and wide, a super vessel,
That shall laugh at all disaster
And with newsreel makers wrestle!

• • • •

Delighted, the master heard,
For his heart was in his work, and the heart
Giveth grace unto every art.
A quiet smile played around his lips
As the eddies and dimples of the tide
Play 'round the bows of ships
That steadily at anchor ride.
And he answered, "You can make a bet
The ship world ain't seen nuthin' yet!"

• • • •

And as he labored his mind ran o'er
The biggest ships in the shipping war;
There on the wall there was a ship,
Then at sea on her maiden trip,
With promenade decks that numbered seven,
Six swimming pools and salons eleven,
A dozen decks and a riding hall,
A rose bowl and a park for ball,
Two polo fields and a hockey rink,
And fourteen places to get a drink!

• • • •

And he said, "That little thing's a dwarf—
Wait'll our ship ties to a wharf!
It'll be so big that when towns would greet it,
They will have to swim to sea to meet it!"

• • • •

Day by day the vessel grew
With every wrinkle something new,
Till after many a week, at length,
Wonderful for her form and strength,
Sublime in its enormous bulk,
Loomed aloft the super hulk!

• • • •

At last all is finished. Hip, hooray!
And now has come the launching day;
All around, above and below,
The sound of hammers, blow on blow;
She starts, she moves, she seems to feel
Her predecessor's now a heel.

• • • •

Into the ocean's arm she dances
And busts the buttons of his "pantses"!

• • • •

How wide! How deep! How tall!
How strong!
How smart! How fast! How cool!
How new!
How grand! How great! And how are you?

• • • •

A din of horns, a million cheers . . .
Now all is well, for it appears
THE LONGEST SHIP BY HALF AN INCH!

Religious Aspect.

It is not a coincidence that this service in dedication of a noble mounment takes place on a Sunday morning. Gov. McNutt and I, aware of the historic relationship of religion in this campaign of the Revolution, and the later ordinance of 1787, have understood and felt the appropriateness of today.

Clark had declared at Kaskaskia that all religons would be tolerated in America. Eight years later the ordinance of 1787, which established the territory northwest of the Ohio River, provided that "no person demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or for religious sentiments in the said territory."

And the ordinance went on to declare that—religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. It seems to me that 149 years later the people of the United States in every part thereof, could reiterate and continue to strive for the principle that religion, morality and knowledge are necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind.

Today religion is still free within our borders: It must ever remain so.

Today morality means the same thing as it meant in the days of George Rogers Clark, though we must need apply it to many, many situations which George Rogers Clark never dreamed of. In his day among the pioneers there were jumpers of land claims and those who sought to swindle their neighbors, though they were poor in this world's goods and lived in sparsely settled communities.

Today among our teeming millions there are still those who by dishonorable means seek to obtain the possessions of their unwary neighbors.

"Must Be on Guard."

Our modern civilization must constantly protect itself against moral defectives whose objectives are the same but whose methods are more subtle than their prototypes of a century and a half ago. We do not change our form of free government when we arm ourselves with new weapons against new devices of crime and cupidity.

Today, as in 1787, we have knowledge; but it is a vastly wider knowledge.

During the past week I have traveled through many States; and, as I have looked out in the daylight hours upon the countryside of Tennessee and Alabama and Arkansas and Texas and Oklahoma, I have tried to visualize what that countryside looked like a short century and a half ago. All of it was primeval forest or untilled prairie, inhabited by an exceedingly small population of nomadic Indian tribes, untouched by white man's civilization.

In most of this vast territory, as here in the Middle West, nature gave her bounteous gifts to the new settlers, and for many long years these gifts were received without thought for the future. Here was an instance where the knowledge of the day was yet insufficient to see the dangers that lay ahead.

Who, even among the second and third generation of the settlers of this virgin land, gave heed to the future results that attended the cutting of the timber which denuded the greater part of the watersheds?

Who, among them, gave thought to the tragic extermination of the wild life which formed the principal article of food of the pioneers?

Who, among them, had ever heard the term "submarginal land" or worried about what would happen when the original soil played out or ran off to the ocean?

Who, among them, were concerned if the market price for livestock for the moment justified the overgrazing of pastures, or a temporary boom in the price of cotton or corn tempted them to forget that rotation of crops was a farming maxim as far back as the days of ancient Babylon?

Who, among them, regarded floods as preventable?

Who, among them, thought of the use of coal, or oil, or gas, or falling water as the means of turning their wheels and lighting their homes?

Who, among them, visualized the day when the sun would be darkened as far East as the waters of the Atlantic by great clouds of top soil borne by the wind from what had been grassy and apparently imperishable prairies?

Must Restore Riches.

Because man did not have our knowledge in those older days, we have wounded nature and nature has taken offense. It is the task of us, the living, to restore to nature many of the riches we have taken from her in order that she may smile once more upon those who come after us.

George Rogers Clark did battle against the tomahawk and the rifle. He saved for us the fair land that lay between the mountains and the Father of Waters. His task is not done. Though we fight with weapons unknown to him, it is still our duty to continue the saving of this fair land.

May the Americans who, a century and a half from now, celebrate at this spot the 300th anniversary of the heroism of Clark and his men, think kindly of us for the part we are taking today in preserving the Nation.

Roosevelt Talk Features Clark Memorial Rite

President Takes Pioneers' Resolution as Text of Indiana Speech.

By the Associated Press.

Vincennes, Ind., June 14.—Following is the text of President Roohevelt's speech here today dedicating the George Rogers Clark Memorial:

Events of history take on their due proportions when viewed in the light of time. With every passing year the capture of Vincennes, more than a century and a half ago when the 13 colonies were seeking their independence, assumes greater and more permanent significance.

The first grave danger as the War of the Revolution progressed, lay in the effort of the British, with their Indian allies, to drive a wedge from Canada through the Valley of Lake Champlain and the Valley of the Mohawk, to meet the British frigates from New York at the head of navigation on the Hudson River. If the important offensive in 1777 had been successful, New England would have been cut off from the States lying to the south, and by holding the line of the Hudson the British, without much doubt, could have conquered first one-half and then the other half of the divided colonies.

The defeat and surrender of Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga is definitely recognized as the turning point of the Revolution.

The other great danger lay, therefore, not in the immediate defeat of the colonies, but rather in their inability to maintain themselves and grow after their independence had been won. Records show that the British planned a definite hemming-in progress, whereby the new nation would be strictly limited in area and in activity to the territory lying south of Canada and east of the Alleghany Mountains.

Planned Drive in Area.

Toward this end they conducted military operations on an important scale west of the Alleghanies, with the purpose, at first successful, of driving back eastward across the montains all those Americans who, before the Revolution, had crossed into what is now Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee.

In the year 1778 the picture of this Western country was dark indeed. The English held all the region northwest of the Ohio and their Indian allies were burning cabins and driving fleeing families back across the mountains south of the river. Three regular forts were all that remained in Kentucky, and their fall seemed inevitable.

Then, against the dark background, stood forth the tall young Virginian, George Rogers Clark. Out of despair and destruction he brought concerted action. With a flash of genius, the 26-year-old leader conceived a campaign—a brilliant masterpiece of military strategy.

Working with the good will of the French settlers, and overawing the Indians by sheer bravado, he swept through the Kaskaskia and other towns of the Illinois country.

But the menace of the regular British forces remained. Col. Henry Hamilton, the British commander of the northwest, had come down from Detroit and seized and fortified Vincennes. Fort Sackville, where we stand today, made Clark's position untenable His desperate resolution to save his men and the northwest by a mid-winter march and an attack by riflemen on a fort manned by the king's own regiment and equipped with cannon, marked the heroic measure of the man.

It is worth repeating—the story that the famous winter march began at Kaskaskia with a religious service. To Father Pierre Gibault, and to Col. Francis Vigo, a patriot of Italian birth, next to Clark himself, the United States is indebted for the saving of the Northwest Territory. And it was in the little log church, predecessor of yonder Church of Saint Francis Xavier, that Col. Hamilton surrendered Vincennes to George Rogers Clark.

lions there are still those who by dishonorable means seek to obtain the possessions of their unwary neighbors.

"Our modern civilization must constantly protect itself against moral defectives whose objectives are the same but whose methods are more subtle than their prototypes of a century and a half ago.

"We do not change our form of free government when we arm ourselves with new weapons against new devices of crime and cupidity."

The President asserted "today we have knowledge; but it is a vastly wider knowledge."

Gov. McNutt and Gov. Horner escorted the President to his train and then returned to the park, where the ceremonies continued with dedication of the memorials to Col. Francis Vigo and Father Pierre Gibault, the trader and priest who aided Clark in his conquest of the Northwest territory.

Augusto Russo, Italian Ambassador at Washington, who flew here yesterday in a private plane, made the dedicatory address at the statue of Col. Vigo and Bishop J. H. Schlarman, of Peoria, Ill., dedicated the monument to Father Gibault.

State police estimated that between 75,000 and 100,000 persons saw the President on his brief visit to Vincennes, either along the route to and from his special train or at the dedicatory exercises.

Illinois Town Spruces All Up For First Lady

Grayville Feels Importance When Mrs. Roosevelt Visits Friend There.

By the Associated Press.

Grayville, Ill., June 14.—This little town of 1,954 men and women today felt itself the most important spot on the country's map. All dressed in its Sunday best it was host to the First Lady of the United States.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was really the house guest of her social secretary, Mrs. James M. Helm, the widow of Rear Admiral Helm, who maintains a summer home here. But this friendly little town on the Wabash River, in southeastern Illinois, took the view she was its guest, too.

Red, white and blue banners, every one of them new, were strung overhead along the "main drag." In the middle of each string was a large one readinñ ::Welcome," which greeted Mrs. Roosevelt as she arrived with Mrs. M. T. Scheider, her personal secretary, and Mrs. Helm in an official car sent down by Gov. Henry Horner.

Mrs. Roosevelt had left the President's party at Vincennes, Ind., for a three-day visit in this section. Early risers saw men out manning a big hose, washing the streets. Soon the street corners were enlivened with youngsters who had that ears-washed look. By the time Mrs. Roosevelt's car reached town they had been joined by their mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles and grandparents.

Eager and excited for a glimpse of the First Lady, the town folk gathered in groups on the corners opposite Mrs. Helm's home. Smiling they watched Mrs. Roosevelt being greeted with baskets of pansies, her favorite flowers, offered her by two solemn youngsters, 12-year-old Nell Frances Eastwood and 11-year-old Palmer Stanley. "And my dress is Eleanor blue, too," the girl told Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mrs. Roosevelt had but time to powder her nose and change to a blue-dotted white satin suit before she was driven out to the 694th Company camp, Grayville CCC. Out there at the edge of town there had been activity since dawn for the camp was host to Mrs. Roosevelt at lunch.

Many Veterans To Save Bonus, They Tell Press

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

New York, June 14.—War veterans will spend their bonus for everything from plural wives to chicken coops, they told reporters in 30 cities, but, if they are to be believed, few of them will squander the money.

Each reporter questioned ten veterans. The most unexpected fact revealed by a compilation of the interviews was that few of the veterans needed the money badly.

Almost half of the paragraph interviews said emphatically that most of the money, if not all, would be saved. The next largest percentage of the 300 persons interviewed said it would be spent on some form of real estate, or to improve property already owned. The next largest group, however, said it would go for old debts and back taxes. The circumstances of many of this group indicated the bonus will be a God-send.

As K. E. Clawson, Salt Lake veteran, said: "The boys are getting older. Foolish spending with them is a thing of the past."

Wants Several Wives.

But there were exceptions, and some of the most interesting interviews came from old soldiers who have refused to let age tame them and who plan to try and bring back a bit of the gay life they tasted in France. The most extreme of this small group, whose full name is omitted for obvious reasons, intends probably the strangest of all uses for his bonus.

He is known as "Shorty" in Florida saloons in which he plays a guiter for contributions. He said he is going to buy an old fishing boat, go to some Caribbean island, probably near Haiti, marry three or four native girls and let them take care of him for the rest of his life.

At the other extreme, and typical of many veterans, Samuel H. Roberts, Miami engineer, will invest his bonus in real estate. He believes Florida is due for another land boom.

Arranges for Fines.

The most humorous interview was with "Man" McEahern, a Charlotte, N. C., Negro veteran, who admitted that the extent of his war experience was peeling potatoes and digging trenches, with an occasional "thurty days in de jug.'

"Yassir, boss. I'se due for one," he said, grinnig jubilantly. "What I gonna do wid it? I'se gwine take it and 'vide it up. I'se gwine give mos' of it to Mistah French (the country store-keeper) to git me outa jail when I gits in. Den I'se gwine to town 'mongst de gurls, an' boy, is I gonna put on de dog! You jes wait!"

A scattering of veterans had the same ideas as "Man," but here are some more typical replies:

E. H. Thomas, Salt Lake bookkeeper—"I'm going to buy a lot, and on the lot I'll borrow money from the FHA to build a home.

Herbert Reel, Pittsburgh, Pa.—I'm going to leave it right where it is. There is no better investment than the Government. I'm working now and I won't take it out."

Will Pay Debts.

Franklin J. Stevenson, Pittsburgh, Pa.—"Pay my debts and on to the veterans' convention in Denver with what's left in September."

C. J. Ballam, Madison, Wis., clerk—"My debts, doctor bills, etc., will take part of my bonus and I'll set aside a little in the bank."

George Gustafson, Seattle, Wash., salesman—"This bonus money means that I can get married at last. I'll buy my girl a diamond ring and put a payment down on a little home we have picked out."

David Zimmerman, Chicago hamburger vendor—"I'm going to fix up my shop and make bigger and better hamburgers."

Elmer Lewis, Philadelphia, Pa.—"The bonus money will give me a chance to buy that chicken farm I've dreamed of."

Adolf Muehlendorff, New Orleans, La.—"Vets shouldn't overlook that all insurance and burial claims on the U. S. Government are cancelled by payment of the bonus so we must take out some kind of insurance to protect our loved ones. I'm going to pay a year's dues in the American Legion, buy some clothes, pay some debts and bank the rest with Uncle Sam."

Police Row Truce Sought by McNair

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 14.—William N. McNair, Mayor of Pittsburgh, under $5,000 bond for "misbehavior" in office, opened the way today for an armistice in his battle with the police department.

He said a "furlough" ordered for Safety Director Thomas A. Dunn will be ended and Dunn returned to duty. Dunn hasn't left.

The McNair-Dunn feud, with each claiming control of the police department, upset the law enforcement branch so badly Sheriff Frank I. Gollmar, of Alleghany County took charge.

McNair had ordered 116 dismissals. Dunn refused to approve the action. Then, McNair appointees and Dunn men worked side-by-side in some districts.

Gollmar stepped in after Judge Ralph H. Smith ordered a grand jury investigation of police magistrates. The sheriff posted a deputy in each Pittsburgh police station.

Smith accused the mayor of "misbehavior" through "deliberate violation of law and promoting a breakdown and demoralization in the police bureau," saying McNair had ordered the magistrate to halt all hearings.

Reserve District but for main streets and crossroad villages throughout the country.

Extra Guards Assigned.

With the postoffice facilities throughout the country destined to be taxed to capacity in the coming week, Treasury and Postoffice detectives took every possible safeguard yesterday to guard against theft and frauds. Extra guards were posted on the mail trains, while warnings were issued that misrepresentation made to gain possession of registered mail containing bonds would be punished by five-year prison sentences, $2,000 fines, or both. Even heavier penalties, they warned, would be inflicted on those attempting to cash bonds not theirs.

With millions of dollars in additional cash expected to be "floating around town" by the end of the week, local merchants everywhere were ordering fresh merchandise and looking over their existing stocks for suitable "bonus specials."

Minor housing booms are expected in many cities, as many veterans have already announced that they intend to "nest egg" their bonus payments in a house that will "guarantee us a roof over our heads." Typical of veteran reactions in this city was that of David Hunter, 1312 Fourth street northwest, who said last night that he had already selected the kind of brick he was going to put into his new house.

FHA Spurs Buying.

The Federal Housing Administration has tried to stimulate this homecoming by pointing out that in most cases the bonus check of the former soldiers would be enough for a "40 per cent down payment on a new home for the veteran and his family."

"Think of your home first," the FHA suggested.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation also saw the bonus payment as a "windfall," in that liquidation of Government home loans to veterans is expected to be speeded.

Although Treasury officials urged veterans to keep their bonus bonds until maturity date, nine years from today, collecting 3 per cent interest annually, the department was prepared to cash the bonds as soon as they were presented.

Debts, Homes at Top.

A survey by American Legion officials at the time the bonus bill was enacted indicated veterans would spend their bonus roughly in this fashion: Payment of old debts, 31.4 per cent; homes and home improvements, 32.4 per cent; business and investments, 7.8 per cent; clothing for the family, 7 per cent; motor cars and tools, 8.7 per cent; insurance, education, savings and miscellaneous, 12.7 per cent.

Legion officials estimate that merchants and retailers will receive $623,615,794 from the payments.

At Indianapolis, Ray Murphy, commander of the American Legion, last night hailed the distribution of the bonus bonds as "the last chapter in the long fight to obtain common justice for the men who bore arms for America."

"The American Legion," he added, "composed, as it is, solely of those who served in the armed forces of our country during the fighting days of the war, brought forward the proposition of adjusting the wartime service pay because it was convinced that it was right and in keeping with the treatment our Government previously had accorded contractors and civilian employes who did not share the hazards of the soldiers, sailors and marines.

"The vast majority of citizens agreed with the course of the legion. Some others disagreed with it. We never questioned the right of any person or group to so disagree with us. True to the principles of this democracy the majority opinion prevailed. The book is now closed. I see no reason why it should be opened again."

and use it to pay off what I owe on the lot? Then I'll build a house on it."

Several other of the veterans thought they would use their money to buy houses. One said he would6 buy a boarding house and rent rooms for a living, while another veteran had a 3-acre plot of land in nearby Maryland already selected.

"I'll build a house on it and maybe cultivate a garden," he said. "I'm only geting $470 and that's all I'll be able too do with it."

Not All in Need.

Not all the veterans seemed to be in need of the money, however. One woman intends to pay her nephew's tuition through college and another former nurse, Agnes Oldfield, is planning to send her bonus payment as a gift to her mother and father, who will celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary toward the end of the year.

Cheery Laura Martin, who has been in the hospital for three years, gayly announced that she would spend half her money on giving the veterans in the hospital a party.

"Some of the veterans aren't getting bonuses," she said, "and they've all been so good to me so I'm going to give them and Dr. Beardsley (the hospital superintendent) a party."

"What will you do with the other half of your money?" she was asked.

Well, if the doctor would let me, I'd like to go away for a trip for three or four days," she replied.

Plan to Take Tour.

Traveling seemed to appeal particularly to these invalid veterans, cooped up in their hospital wards. One veteran, well in his fifties, intended to purchase a trailer and to tour the country with his wife. Others planned to visit relatives and members of their families.

"I'm going to take my mother on a trip to California and Florida," declared one. "My mother has a brother in Florida she hasn't seen for years. We'll travel by train."

Some of the veterans replied they would have no money to spend. One who was getting only a small amount said it would go to the District to pay taxes; several others had bills to pay, while another, whose wife had been in the hospital for the last six months, bitterly remarked:

Removing a set of earphones with which he had been listening to the radio program that is broadcast to the patients, one veteran shook his head when asked how he was going to spend his money.

"I'm not going to spend it," he responded. "When I leave here I'm going to look for work. I'll save my money until I find a job. I have some bills to pay. I won't spend any of it."

In an adjoining ward, a thin-faced veteran grinned broadly when asked about his spending plans.

"I've got eight children," he answered. "I guess I won't have any trouble spending it."

Eastman Urges Container Plan To Ship Freight

Method Would Slash Cost of Transporting Goods, Co-ordinator Says.

By the Associated Press.

Development of a Nation-wide container service in the movement of freight by rail, highway and water was proposed today by Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation.

The co-ordinator's powers are due to expire today unless Congress acts on a proposal to extend the position. The plan advanced yesterday featured a detialed and complex report by him on transportation property and equipment.

Savings of millions of dollars in the handling of present freight and creation of much new business was predicted through use of containers. These would permit unit movement of thousands of products that now are handled piecemeal, he said.

Eastman said the idea was not new but is now used in a limited manner in this country in some localities and industries, and had proved highly successful in several foreign countries for national and international freight.

Two broad types of containers were described in the 282-page report. One was a platform or rack upon which products could be stacked. The other was a box-like structure similar to the body of a large motor truck or a small railroad box-car without wheels.

These containers would be loaded at the point of shipment, then transferred by motor truck to railroad or boat, and finally delivered intact to the destination.

Eastman said the comprehensive plan would "eliminate needless effort and expense in the transportation of many kinds of freight" and avoid much of the present "waste and expense in the handling and movement of a substantial portion of the present freight traffic."

As an example of savings he cited costs in moving a shipment of groceries now from New York to Chicago. He said present "cartage and loading" costs per ton on this now averages $5.60 and that through use of containers it would be less than $1.00 per ton.

Veterans Are Now Looking For Business Opportunities!
The bonus is going to give thousands of veterans a new start in life. Many are looking for an opportunity in which to invest their bonus money in a small business. These veterans are now watching the Business Opportunities Column in The Post every morning. The United States Veterans Administration estimates that $19,315,000 will be paid to veterans in Washington and the surrounding area. From a questionnaire sent to 50,000 veterans, the American Legion estimates that 40 per cent of the bonus money will be spent for buying homes, investments in business and savings. Whatever kind of business you have for sale, here, indeed, is a timely opportunity to sell it.
Of course, if you want to keep the sale of your business confidential, request that a box reply be used. There is no extra charge for this service. In this way you can dispose of your business without your neighbors and associates knowing of the sale until the deal is closed.

Mrs. Moses to Study Painting This Summer

Chevy Chase Socialite Will Be Accompanied by Younger Daughter and Son on Trip to Magnolia, Mass.

Painting rather than parties this summer will occupy Mrs. Arthur C. Moses and her daughter, Miss Mary Wade Moses, who leave today for Magnolia, Mass. They will be accompanied by Mrs. Moses' younger daughter, Patricia, who also is interested in drawing and sculpture, and by her young son, Billy Moses.

Pictures by both mother and daughter were shown recently at a tea at which Mr. and Mrs. Moses entertained at their home in Chevy Chase. One of the portraits by Mrs. Moses is a picture, just completed, of Mrs. Henry Berlinger, who was among those present at the tea.

There also was a picture by Mrs. Moses of her daughter, classic in design, with Miss Moses seated beside a Grecian vase and wearing a white satin gown of Grecian lines with her hair after the fashion of the women of early Greece.

Among other recent portraits by Mrs. Moses were those of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Adolph Gosling, of St. David's, Pa.; Mrs. Clyde Asher, of Washington; Col. John H. Cowles, sovereign grand commander of the supreme council of the Scottish Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of Masons, and Mr. William Betts Rodier, violinist.

Miss Mary Wade Moses, who has been drawing and painting since she was a child in kindergarten, started working in oils and studied with some of the same teachers under whom her mother has worked. A year ago, however, she decided to try watercolors and prefers them as a medium.

She has done landscapes and scenes along the waterfront, and now is seeking subjects among the inhabitants of the Zoo. The waterfowl assemble in artistic groups undisturbed by the presence of the artist or the passersby, who frequently stop to watch her as she works.

Miss Patricia Moses, like her older sister is developing an interest in art, often illustrating fairy tales she reads, and has been making soap sculptures recently.

Loretta Fritsch Becomes Bride Of Mr. Creditor

Miss Loretta Claris Fritsch, of Washington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Fritsch, of Sayre, Pa., became the bride of Mr. Morris Creditor, son of Mrs. Sarah Creditor, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on Saturday at noon in the rectory of the Epiphany Church in Sayre. The Rev. Father Houlihan officiated in the presence of the families and a few close friends. A wedding breakfast followed at the Wilbur Hotel, when the guests numbered 50.

The bride, who has made her home in Washington for the last several years, was graduated from the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., and George Washington University.

SYNOPSIS.

Though her childhood sweetheart, faithful George Dwight, pleads with her to come home to America and marry him, Ruth Starling insists on staying in London and using her recently inherited wealth to go on the stage. Through her London lawyer, Mr. Singleton, Ruth meets Capt. Philip Trefane and his wife, Iris, two scheming adventurers. Capt. Trefane is interested in theatricals, though short of capital. His aunt, the Marchioness Cicester, is loaning the Trefanes her old Cornwall castle for the summer, and they offer to take Ruth as a paying guest. Capt. Trefane consults a money lender regarding insuring Ruth Starling's life in his favor.

CHAPTER V.

"WHAT AMOUNT would you advise?" he asked.

"It isn't what I advise. The question is, what amount would be safe, and what would old-fashioned lawyers like my own father have called 'all square'?"

"It's a pity your father isn't here now to advise his worthy son," said Trefane insolently.

"How about 25,000 pounds?"

"What would you want for your share?"

The question was put in a brutal tone, and the answer was equally brutal.

"Ten thou'; and it ought to be twelve."

"Not good enough, Rawle. You pay one premium on a young and healthy life, and there your risk ends."

"You're wrong, as usual, captain. In the case of Miss Starling's death such a sum might not be paid over without a good deal of money, trouble, and—investigation."

"And who'd be in the soup?" cried Trefane angrily. "'Not Doll Rawle' is your answer! I've been a fool today, wasting your time, and my own, too. Your idea of a fair deal is not good enough for me. Even Singleton will be willing to see me through till my 40,000 pounds a week begins to come in."

Asks Bigger Insurance.

"Those family solicitors are treading on velvet all the time," said the money lender sorely.

The other as only answer turned away, and he was making for the door when there came an imperious "Wait a mo', captain."

Trefane only half turned around. "Yes? What is it?"

"I think you're being foolish; I do indeed! After all, it's a matter of 50,000 pounds, isn't it? Accidents do happen; 7,000 people were run over and killed in this country by motor cars last year. I was nearly run over myself yesterday! If I were you I'd insure the girl for the whole amount."

Trefane walked back to the table. "I don't expect you to believe me, but I do intend to act fairly by Ruth Starling," he said heatedly. "It's a big chance for me, and in the end she may spend a good deal more than 50,000 pounds. I've reason to think she has over ten times that amount of money—and once the stage has got you, it's got you!"

Doll Rawle looked at the speaker. He felt genuinely puzzled. He generally knew when a man was telling the truth, but this time he felt he didn't know whether the ring of truth in Philip Trefane's voice just now had been genuine—or the other thing.

"I'm always for a man running straight rather than crooked; I've told you that before, but you haven't always believed me."

"How about that insurance?" asked Trefane roughly.

"I'll go in with you up to the larger amount."

"And ask 25,000 pounds as your share, eh, if anything happens to the girl?"

"I'd be content with 15,000 pounds," said Rawle gravely. "After all, I'm putting up the premium money, and I shall have more trouble than you think for. No one insurance office will take on such a sum on one life, even for a short time. Also, there's another thing."

"What's that?" asked Philip Trefane suspiciously.

Must Pay Premium.

"If, as we both hope and intend, nothing happens to the young lady, you will have to pay me back that premium. So much a week after your big salary starts being paid, and if you play me up I go straight to Miss Starling and make her stop the money out of your salary."

When Philip Trefane returned to the ill-furnished apartment which had been lent to the couple by a friend of Iris he found his wife putting on her hat.

"Hullo," she exclaimed, "what have you been doing this morning?"

"Just lazing about," he answered evasively, and she knew that meant that he didn't mean her to know what he had been doing. But Iris by nature was incurious, and experience had taught her that it was often better for her own peace of mind not to know what her Philip happened to be about at any particular moment of his still idle days.

"Where are you going, sweetheart?" he asked, gazing at her, as always, with affection and admiration. "You look as if you were going to an assignation! That's a new hat, isn't it?"

"Yes, and isn't it smart? I haven't got to tell you whose present it is. That American girl is the most generous creature I've ever struck! Sometimes—very often, in fact—I feel inclined to touch wood, for I can hardly believe in our luck."

She came up to him, and talking his hand, squeezed it nervously, as she added: "My assignation is with her, darling. I'm lunching at the Savoy, and then I'm taking her to Mother Shipton."

To Fortune Teller.

"If I believed, as you do, in fortune telling, I don't know that I'd take our little Ruthie there," he observed.

His wife dropped his hand, and then she said gayly: "I made Mrs. Shipton, old man, for it was thanks to me that Ada Byng took the prince there! So she'll do anything to please me, and she knows who's coming to consult her today. Ruth Starling will be made thoroughly to understand that she's got to stick to us if it's to be 'roses, roses, all the way,' and also that she must keep clear of love. That's my real fear. Once it's known she's rich, heaps of fortune hunters will be after her. Mrs. Shipton will tell her to beware."

Philip Trefane gave a hoot of laughter. "So that's the way the thing it worked? I suppose you and Mrs. Byng put that old fraud wise about the prince."

"Indeed we didn't——" Iris frowned. "I told you a month ago that Mother Shipton foretold we were going to meet a gold nugget, and we have."

She was now opening an ill-fitting drawer and taking out of it a fine handkerchief. She shook on it a drop of the only scent—a costly scent—she ever used. Her husband had given her a large bottle as a love gift the day before, after everything had been finally settled between him and the American actress and a check for £500 had been given to him for "preliminary expenses." And now as she turned toward the door, "Good luck, pet!" he called out. "By the way, I suppose I ought to write to Aunt Albinia?"

"Well, yes, I think you must do that. I wrote to her yesterday asking when we may take over the castle. The sooner we get away from this beastly hole the beter," and she look around the bare, ugly bedroom with a touch of disgust.

Women Still Talk of Males, Men of Money

"WHEN WOMEN meet, they talk about men; when men meet, they talk about money." Recent proof of the truth of this ancient observation was presented recently at Syracuse University when Prof. Roland McKee of the psychology department read a report on favorite conversational subjects.

Research workers, eavesdropping on 431 conversations, classified and tabulated their discoveries to the effect that 22 per cent of the women's dialogues were about men; that clothes came in for attention in 19 per cent of the chats, while the others were devoted to other women, themselves and their studies.

Other points in the survey reveal that when a man converses with a woman he discusses amusements in 22 per cent of the cases, talks of finance in 19 per cent of the chats; himself, 17 per cent of the time; other men, 11; other women, 5, and school work, 2 per cent of the time.

When a woman, conversing with a man, sets the pace in talking, she introduces amusements in 22 per cent of the topics discussed; talks about clothes 17 per cent of the time; herself, 15 per cent, and other men are mentioned in 14 per cent of the conversations. What she never discusses on her own initiative, according to the report, are health, the weather and sports.

When men get together, they discus busines and money 49 per cent of the time; other men, 12 per cent of the time; amusements, 9; themselves, 7; college work, 3.

'Natural' Shade Close to White In Popularity

Ideal 'Basic Color' as Background for Variety of Hues in Accessories.

By Ethel Ehlen.
Post Fashion Editor.

A STRONG runner-up in popularity on white this summer is the soft creamy color known as "natural," which is so flattering to summer skins. Suits, frocks, daytime and evening clothes and even play apparel are appearing in this shade.

As a basic color for attractive and striking color schemes, it is incomparable, and being so neutral in tone, it merges beautifully with any color of the spectrum. There are endless possibilities if a person is ingenious and possesses a bit of artistry, and one suit or frock may serve as several by clever manipulation of accessories.

Many Color Choices.

Natural with bright red, shades of green, soft or bright blue, May Wine or brown—all these are costume color possibilities. Take a suit (and suits, by the way, continue in unprecedented popularity this summer) of natural tone and add to it hat and shoes in the same color; belt, scarf, gloves and handbag in any of the shades just mentioned, and you have an ensemble worthy of the most pretentious daytime occasion. And, as paradoxical as it may seem, the same costume can go to business or shopping, with equal smartness and suitability.

For the woman of the fragile, feminine type who prefers and looks particularly well in the pastel tints, a suit or frock in natural shade can be contrasted successfully with any of the season's choice in pastels. Black or Navy with natural is an individual and extremely smart combination for the vivid type of woman who does not need brilliant color to stimulate her personality.

Travel clothes in natural tone are ideal, light enough to be summery in appearance, and still so neutral as to elude the dust and grime of trains. Add to this, the wrinkle-resisting materials and those which are tubable, natural-colored costumes seem to have everything from a standpoint of practicability as well as conservative chic.

Triangle Scarves.

Some of the newest suits for summer have gone so completely versatile; they may be worn as either suits or frocks. In this category are the suits finished with an ascot or triangle scarf and need no blouse when worn as a dress. Eliminate the scarf, add a blouse or gillet and you have a suit. Several changes of scarfs, blouses and gillets and you have almost a complete wardrobe. Designers are certainly catering to the modern American woman, this season!

Fashion whims come and go, but the suit this season continues to be an intgeral part of the summertime picture. No well-groomed woman can rightly boast of the title unless she appears, at least occasionally, in a trim suit of good lines and one of the many new fabrics. To be swank this summer, means to be "well-suited" and even a very smart suit needs clever and individual accessories.

Habits of Living Shifting Rapidly

AMERICAN habits of living are shifting at a rapid pace, according to John Starie, graduate student of Columbia University. In the April Journal of the National Council for the Social Studies he lists, among other things, the eating and drinking habits, men's and women's clothing, furniture, houses, stores, automobiles, radio, dancing, sports, as they have changed, appeared or disappeared from 1911 to the present time.

Mr. Starie notes that clothing for men and women, particularly for the latter, has tended toward "disappearance." Under "pocketbooks" he says: "In a woman's pocketbook are likely to be found the following articles which would not have been common 20 years ago—vanity case, cigarette pack or case, matches, 'bobby pins' in place of the old-style hairpin, fountain pen or pencil. Those few articles tell a great deal about the changing habits and position of women."

Methods of doing kitchen work have been revolutionized in this compartively short period, he notes, with the increased use of automatic machinery, irons, metal kitchen furniture, aluminum and stainless steel and the innumerable mixers and squeezers. The toasting fork and open fire become a disappearing "pattern" with the advent of the electric toaster.

Natural Color With Green

Coolness on torrid days is possible in clothes fashioned of a new material, Mt. Airy cloth, composed of acetate yarn and tussah silk. The yarn prevents the heat from being transmitted to the body and the silk makes it porous. In natural tone, it offers numerous possibilities for color contrasts in accessories. The suit shown has buttons, belt and scarf of bright green; also available in red trimmings. The price is $19.75. For information call The Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Line 323.

The GENTLER SEX . . .

By Malvina Lindsay.

Soliloquy of a Club Hack.

IF I WERE to move to a new town,
I would immediately set about,
Establishing a reputation
For being a wholly irresponsible woman.

I would never, so help me Heaven,
Be on time
For any engagement,
Even if I had to wait in the corner drug store
To effect a late entrance.

I would forget all about appointments
With people I "ought to see,"
And some way I would never show up
At places where martyrs were needed
To help swell the crowd.

And then maybe in time people would say
"Oh, don't pay any attention to Gertie,
She's always late, you simply never
Can count on her.

II.

IF I WERE to move to a new town,
I would sweetly and smilingly
Join all the clubs and societies
And then forget all about going to meetings.

And if I ever attended a club luncheon or banquet,
That was followed by speeches,
I would firmly excuse myself after the salted pecans
To meet a pressing engagement.

I'd blithely accept chairmanship
Of every possible committee
But someway I'd never call meetings
Or else I'd have to resign
To have an operation.

And then maybe in time people would say
"Oh, for heaven's sakes, don't appoint Gertie,
She means well, but you simply never
Can depend upon her.

III.

IF I WERE to move to a new town,
I would stop replying to letters
From people who knew me in high school,
Or Knobtown, Nebraska, or dear old South Campus.

And if I ever weakened and went anywhere
Out of duty,
I certainly never would bother
To send "thank you" notes or call on the phone,
Thus inviting further disaster.

I'd lose all my Christmas card lists in the packing
And not suffer one twinge of conscience
When beautiful drawings of Santy
And intimate photos of fireside groups
Began to arrive in December.

And then maybe in time people would say
"Oh don't be too hard upon Gertie,
She'd give you her shirt, but she simply
Never will write,

IV.

IF I WERE to move to a new town
I would with studied direction
See to it that my behavior
In certain cricles became highly erratic

I would have no sense of the value of money
Or meaning of bills
My dues would be always behind
And I'd borrow quarters and never return them
So as never to be a club treasurer

I would invariably suffer lapses of memory
At sight of persons with causes
And I'd be stricken with claustrophobia
In the midst of recitals and pageants
And all amateur theatricals

And then in time maybe people would say
"Oh you have to be patient with Gertie,
She's just that way, you simply can never
Put your finger upon her.

Advance Dieting GoodPrevention Of Sea Sickness

Light Eating and Quiet on Board Ship Also Recommended.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

With many persons any unusual motion or change of direction will bring on digestive upsets, dizziness, and disturbances of the circulation. The most common experience is seasickness, but the same symptoms may arise when riding in a motor car, an airship, or on a merry-go-round.

Seasickness is as old as navigation. In seeking to escape from Mark Antony, Cicero became so ill from the pitching of the boat that he desired to return to death rather than expose himself to further suffering. Plutrach held that the sensations were of psychic origin; that only those fell victims who were afraid of the water. There is considerable testimony indicating that even seasoned sailors may become ill during violent storms or unusually rough weather. At any rate wide differences in susceptibility are observed and many are unable to cross the ocean with a single comfortable day.

Drowsiness a Symptom.

The early signs include a feeling of emptiness in the stomach and of tightness in the throat. This occasions frequent swallowing. Headache, some dizziness, and drowsiness usually precede nausea, and as these manifestations increase in severity an utter distaste for food develops. Uncontrallable retching and vomiting come on in waves. The gait is unsteady and the face at first pale and bloodless, may become congested. Vertigo (dizziness) may be almost continuous, and if there is an appreciable amount of vomiting the abdominal muscles will become sore and tender. The appearance personifies "despair" The eyes are sunken and often show signs of jaundice. The tongue is heavily coated.

If one is inclined to become motion sick, treatment should be begun 48 hours before the journey is undertaken. This includes a reduction in the amount of food consumed, which should be of the simplest character. Once launched on the trip, food should be taken in small quantities and all liquids restricted at least for the first 24 hours. Many who are subject to the malady have received much relief through wearing colored glasses and through training themselves not to observe moving objects.

Promptly upon the appearance of symptoms the patient should go to bed with an icebag for the head and heat for the stomach area. If vomiting occurs some food should be taken soon thereafter. A certain amount of digestion will take place, and the practice of eating after every vomiting attack is desirable. This may be a difficult prescription to follow, as the distaste for food increases. A soft egg with a little toast, a small piece of steak or roast beef with one vegetable should be consumed, even though the patient is not hungry and has a marked antipathy for food. Fruits and fruit juices appear to accentuate the symptoms, as will large quantities of liquid. If coffee is used it should be strong and black and taken without sugar.

Most Remedies Valueless.

All sorts of remedies have been suggested, most of which are of little value. Some of them are sedatives in disguise and one should never take a drug of this sort except under a physician's instructions. No mechanical device will be of much assistance, although a so-called 'sea-sickness belt had a great vogue some years ago. One might as well wear a snakeskin collar.

With excessive vomiting acidosis must be guarded against. The body tissues will need water, and the sipping of iced ginger ale is often helpful. Unfortunately a remedy that proves efficacious in one case will not in another. It is largely a question of nervous temperament and emotional stability. Some travelers relate that by using enough sedatives to make them drowsy they were able to sleep for the first 24 hours on board ship. The theory of this type of management is that the nervous reactions become so dulled that their constitutional effects will not manifest themselves.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

What Can Be Done When Another Tries to Steal One's Long-Time Beau, Asks Woman of 29.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a woman 29 years of age and for nearly five years have been going with a man who is now past 50. During the past year he has also been going out occasionally with another girl. I think she is trying to take him away from me and there are times when I think he is very much in love with her. I love him with all my heart and I don't know how to deal with the situation. Should I try to hold his love, or would it be better for me to try to forget him? I don't believe I could ever meet another man I would care for so much. Please give me your best advice.

WORRIED.

* * * *

DEAR WORRIED: When any courtship or engagement drifts along for five years, it means as a rule that one or the other of the two persons involved is not very deeply in love. And there is always the danger, in such a set-up, that the person who is the less interested of the two will eventually turn to someone else. I believe that is what is happening here.

* * * *

It may be, of course, that the man is simply flattered by the other woman's attentions, or her receptive attitude toward his attentions, and that if forced to make a choice between you and her, he would choose you. The best method of handling the situation would be for you to start going out occasionally with some man nearer your own age. Nothing is better calculated to force a man's hand, romantically, than his discovery that the woman he believes loves him is capable of living without him. Also, since a man's love relationships are so inextricably bound up with his ego processes, the best method of adding fuel to the flames of whatever love this man feels for you is to provide him with a younger man as a presumable rival.

* * * *

The thrill of the chase has in all probability long since died out of your relationship. He probably feels you are his for the asking. Man by his very nature must, during courtship, be kept in a state of uncertainty regarding his sweetheart's feelings if he is to be aided in eventually developing that emotional fixation in her regard which leads to his decision that he cannot live without her; that he must, in fact, make her a fixed quantity in his life by marrying her. Only by a woman's building up a reservoir of heart-hunger in a man, through a subtle mixture of coquettishness, indifference and retreat, can he be brought to the point where he looks forward ardently to a forever-and-ever relationship (namely: marriage) between them.

Non-Support Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a problem that is just about driving me frantic. I am married and have an 8-year-old son. My husband and I are separated. Isn't there some way he can be made to support the child? He has not given 1 cent toward his support since he was born. I am crippled and unable to work for long at a time, but do the best I can, so that the child is clothed and sent to school.

* * * *

He has been living with his grandmother near Washington until recently, while I have been living in town so as to be closer to my work. His grandmother cannot do for him any longer, and there is no one else to look after him but me, so I have been thinking if his father was made to contribute something to his support, I could have my son with me. I have worried so much about the situation that the doctor says if I do not get rest soon I will have a breakdown.

* * * *

For eight years I did not know where my husband was living. About a month ago I learned his address. Now I am afraid that he may move again before I can take action against him. There must be some way to make a father support his child. Can you advise me what steps to take, or whom to go to? Thanking you kindly, I am,

DESPONDENT MOTHER.

* * * *

DEAR DESPONDENT MOTHER: Take your problem without delay to the Legal Aid Society, 1010 Vermonth avenue, the Denrike Building. Miss Beatrice Clephane is director of the society and will see that you are given sympathetic consideration and the best legal advice and assistance. If you are not in a position to pay for this advice, or for such legal aid as may be necessary to force your husband to support his child, the Legal Aid Society will provide such service free of charge.

* * * *

Certainly your husband should be made to support his sons, and inasmuch as you are physically handicapped, his failure to do so amounts, in my opinion, to criminal negligence. If he is making any income whatsoever, I am sure any court would decree that he allot some portion of his earnings toward the maintenance and education of his child. As a matter of fact, severe penalties exist for punishing parents who fail to live up to this fundamental social obligation. Take my advice and consult the Legal Aid Bureau at once.

M. H.

Sweaters Becoming More Blouse-Like

Sweaters are becoming more blouse-like in appearance. These are made in sheer angora and alpaca, and may have band collars that fasten at back, contrasting tuck-in scarfs knitted in pleats, and bow buttons of the fabric.

Satin in Raincoats.

Black satin will make its appearance in the autumn raincoat. These coats will be made on more "dressy" lines than the usual raincoat, having fuller sleeves and soft collars.

Higher crowns are predicted for the first fall hats, according to reports from Paris. Tall cone and sugar loaf crowns are said to be finding favor with designers.

Wine red is expected to be a popular color. It may be used alone or combined with dark blue in velvet berets. Other colors expected to appear are light tan with green, dull yellow with green and navy with lighter blue.

Father and Daughter Bond Should Be Developed Early

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THERE COMES a time in a girl's life when she turns for advice to an older man rather than to a woman. If this man is her father, so much the better. If she cannot turn to her father, she may unburden herself to the doctor or pastor, or she may go further afield and choose a family friend or even a comparative stranger. What she is seeking is the man's point of view from some one older and more experienced whom she can trust.

The wise father, foreseeing this time, prepares for it from the first. He becomes acquainted with his daughter when she is small, wins her confidence, shows pleasure in her companionship, and so is naturally the person to whom she turns when the need arises. The mother, if she is wise, encourages the close relationship between father and daughter. She sends them on pleasure trips together, gives them chances for long talks, and never pries into their secrets.

There are many women whose own sense of importance is such that they insist always on being the center of the stage, and resent their daughters taking any of their husbands' time and attention. In the long run they are the losers by such an exclusive attitude, and rob both husband and daughter of a priceless relationship.

One of Mrs. Smith's happiest experiences was sending her husband and daughter off on a vacation. She herself stayed at home and had a complete rest. They took the car and toured the country for 10 days.

The girl left home restless and discontented, and came back full of life and enthusiasm, with a new sense of importance and a bond of interest with her father which made life richer and fuller for both. Mrs. Smith felt that her vacation had been profitably spent when she gave it to her daughter.

Drys Cheer Talk By Amelia Earhart

Tulsa, Okla., June 14 (AP).—Amelia Earhart told the Women's Christian Temperance Union today that alcohol and flying will not mix.

"Incidentally, I would be afraid to use any kind of stimulant either during or before an important flight.

"The commercial airlines, you know, have a standing rule that no pilot can take a drink 24 hours before a scheduled flight. One curious thing we have noticed in flying is that at higher altitudes the effect of drinking is much more pronounced, the 'hangover' lasts longer."

Miss Earhart said it was her impression most fliers are beginning to realize the ill effects of drinking on their work."

As for the future of aviation, Miss Earhart prophesied:

Driver to Face Court on Girl's Assault Charge

Wilmer Tippett, 22, of Ardmore, Md., a taxicab driver, will be arraigned in Police Court today on charges of criminally attacking a 13-year-old girl.

He was arrested on a hack stand Saturday after the girl had furnished police a description of her reputed assailant. She later identified Tippett as the man who assaulted her, police said.

The girl told police she had arrived in Union Station with her mother and younger sister on their way to Jacksonville, Fla. She said she had gone out on the Plaza, where the cab driver asked her if she wanted to take a ride. When she refused, police reported her as saying, she was grabbed and held in the front seat until the cab arrived at a lonely spot in southeast. Here, she told police, the driver attacked her and then brought her back to the station.

Meanwhile, three other men will appear in Police Court for extradition hearings in connection with assault cases in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Wilton W. Bullock, 34, of 604 Ninth street southeast, is being held at the First Precinct for Virginia authorities following the complaint to police of Miss Ollie Barb, 25, of 1835 Eighteenth street northwest, who said that she was attacked by Bullock in Arlington County Friday night.

The other men, Jack R. Griffin, 25, of 110 Fourth street southeast, and William E. Jenkins, 507 M street southeast, were arrested by Fifth Precinct police yesterday for Maryland police.

A warrant charging them with criminal assault on Edna Jones, 19, of 537 Ninth street southeast, will be presented in Police Court today at the extradition hearing. Miss Jones told police two men forced her into a car at Ninth and G streets and drove her out Alabama avenue southeast into Maryland.

SEC Issues Pass Six-Billion Mark

Since the registration features of the securities act of 1933 went into operation in July, 1933, securities of various types for an aggregate of slightly more than $6,000,000,000 have become effective, thus being eligible for distribution by issuers or their underwriters and agents. The six-billion-dollar mark was passed early this month.

Under the terms of the act, 20 days must elapse after registration before it becomes effective, and in May there were additional applications covering securities with a value of approximately $586,000,000, some of which are not yet effective.

Yale Head Assails TownsendProgram

New Haven, Conn., June 14 (AP).—Dr. James Rowland Angell, of Yale, alluded today to the Townsend pension plan as something out of Alice in Wonderland.

In his baccalaureate address to more than a thousand Yale seniors and to hundreds of alumni, the university president declared that the issues at stake in this country commonly are treated as though "exclusively economic and political in character," but that they are "deeply saturated with ethical and spiritual elements."

"Shall we," he asked, "follow the benign Dr. Townsend and achieve social security by an old-age pension system which would have delighted the White Knight and might well have been invented by him?"

This, he said, would amount to yielding to "the hocus-pocus of the lunatic fringe."

"We Wash Everything But the Baby and Dry Clean the Rest"

ROARING WIDE OPEN! Fred Jacoby, Jr., outboard motor-boat champion. "Good digestion is all-important in this game," Fred says. "Camels make food taste better and help me get the good out of what I eat."

A CASHIER HAS TO BE fast—accurate—pleasant. Miss Travis Lander, shown at the ticket window of a New York movie, says: "I like to smoke at mealtime. Camels help my digestion—cheer me up."

A SUGGESTION

"For Digestion's sake—smoke Camels"

Scientists have found that Camels promote well-being by stimulating the flow of the digestive fluids ...alkaline digestive fluids...necessary for good digestion. Often fatigue, worry, excitement, nervousness—all interfere with this digestive flow. Camels restore and increase it. Discriminating smokers everywhere commend Camels for the comfort and good cheer they find in smoking Camels.

With their finer, costlier tobaccos, Camels give mildness a new meaning. They do not get on your nerves or rasp your throat.

Tuberculosis Deaths Reach Lowest Level

The highest daily average number of patients in the history of the District Tuberculosis Hospital were cared for during the last 11 months, Dr. J. Winthrop Peabody, superintendent, reported to the Board of Public Welfare yesterday.

"The total number of deaths during the same 11 months was 51, the lowest in the history of the hospital," Dr. Peabody reported.

During the last 11 months the daily average number of patients in the hospital was 224. During the 11 months ended with May 31, 1925, the average number of patients was 217.4 and deaths numbered 86. Two years before the hospital had 215 patients and 79 deaths.

"Diminishing proportion of deaths in the face of increasing population unquestionably is due to improved methods of treating the tuberculous including modern operative therapy including pneumothorax and thoracoplasty, Dr. Peabody said. "Another important effect of the new methods of therapy is that under modern operative procedures, the patient does not need to stay as long a time in the hospital as he did when the treatment was primarily, rest, food and fresh air. In other words, operative techniques are hastening nature's normal recuperative procedures.

"This means that in a given time the hospital can care for more patients and, at the same time, giving them a better chance of recovery, and that while handling more patients the hospital can care for a larger proportion of the persons in the community suffering from tuberculosis and can get them at an earlier stage in their disease which, again, means a better chance for recovery."

Ground Is Broken For Trinity Church

Stressing the importance of educating the young in religion, Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, prominent Episcopalian layman of Washington yesterday addressed the congregation of Trinity Episcopal Church, Dahlia street and Piney Branch road northwest, at the ground breaking ceremony for the new church.

Dr. Bowen declared that there is no such thing as a "dead" church, but that the people in it are "dead." He added that if the younger generation today knew more about the church it would be more interested.

The first spade of earth was turned over by the Rev. Reno S. Harp, rector, the remainder of the ceremony being conducted by the vestrymen. The Rev. Christian M. Young, rector emeritus, said the benediction.

The new church, which will be of early English Gothic design, is expected to be completed by Christmas. It will be constructed of granite at an estimated cost of $35,000.

Searchers Fail to Find D. C. Man's Body in Bay

A 24-hour search in Chesapeake Bay by Maryland State police and volunteer workers yesterday failed to locate the body of Beverly Fenderson, 23, of 2111 First street northwest.

While fishing Saturday about 3 miles below Chesapeake Beach, Fenderson plunged from his boat in pursuit of a lost oar. Apparently he was seized with cramps and sank before his companion, A. R. Stinson, also of 2111 First street northwest, could reach him.

Veteran Forms An Association Of D. C. Guides

A. R. Rowles Sets Up Group Designed to Eradicate 'Lot of Loose Talk.'

Envisioning a Nation-wide organization that will eliminate "a lot of loose talk" from the sightseeing guide business, A. R. Rowles, after 18 years of experience in the field, has set up an association.

He has called it the American Guides' Association. He is the manager. The offices are at 1726 Pennsylvania avenue. So far the organization is local—22 "seasoned" guides belong, but if all goes well for Rowles there will be branches in every sightseeing center in the United States, and Washington will be the home city.

Announcing the officers of his newly-formed group yesterday, Rowles said the time had come to lift the "sightseeing guide out of the ditches."

They're Too Smart, He Says.

"He should be someone to respect," he pointed out. "Why, the people who come here to see Washington are too smart nowadays to take the lectures some guides hand out. For too long these men have been operating on the theory that it takes just as much effort to tell the truth about a monument, or a public building, as a lie."

Rowles said the school children that come here from all sections of the country give the untrained guide his most trying moments.

"I've known them to have more information about a statue than the guide—and they usually know the truth from the fiction. Anyhow, it's not right to send them home with stories that would make Washington, Hamilton or Jefferson turn in their graves if they heard them," the guide manager said.

Rowles proposes examinations on the background of the sightseeing points for all prospective members of his association. If they pass satisfactorily, they will be given an insignia, and with it a uniform—gray shirt, black tie, blue cap and serge trousers. And it's up to the guides after they prove their qualifications to "keep up on the sights." They won't be permitted to go stale on the job.

"Got Busy" With Idea.

About two years and a half ago Rowles conceived the idea of the organization he is now forming.

"I suddenly realized that millions of dollars had been spent to make Washington a place for people from all over the country to see—and not one cent had been spent to put together a group of men who could intelligently show the city off," he said. "So I got busy."

This week Rowles is going to New York to view the prospects of organizing another branch of the association there. If successful, he is going to Boston, and then cities in the other sections.

Pamphlet to Lure Visitors Outlines 'Vacation' for $10

A complete two-week vacation stay in Washington at a cost of only $10 above ordinary living and transportation expenses is outlined in a pamphlet prepared by the office of the National Capital Parks.

The pamphlet, entitled "Your Vacation in Washington," points out that the National Capital enjoys some of the finest public golfing facilities in the country, ample fishing and boating opportunities along the Potomac, sun bathing and swimming in the city's pools, hikes and horseback riding in Rock Creek Park and tennis and horseshoe-pitching courts.

The vacation schedule also calls for concerts by the U. S. Army, Navy and Marine bands at night and varied programs of entertainment scheduled nightly in the Sylvan Theater on the Monument Grounds.

"Washington is a veritable vacation land," read the pamphlet. "Not only does the Nation's Capital attract millions of vacationers from all parts of the world each year, but it has to offer virtually every feature to be found in the famed watering and mountain resorts of the world. And all is to be found for so small a cash outlay that the expense is almost negligible."

Son of Plane Hero Who Died In Poverty Is Veterans' Mascot

Tom Hewitt, 12, Who Knows Father Only as Valorous Story-Book Figure, Will Be One of Boys' at Chapter 2 of Capital D. A. V.

He was voted to the office recently by members of the National Capital Chapter, No. 2, Disabled American Veterans.

Tom is the son of the late Thomas M. Hewitt, jr., hero flyer of the World War, and a member of the famed Lafayette Escadrille, and in the words of Senior Vice Commander Ralph Leonard, the chapter adopted Tom because it "wants to show, through this lad, its high respect and appreciation of the many valorous deeds of his father."

"Hewitt was not only a hero and a credit to the service," Leonard added, "but to this boy, he represents something noble and fine, and we earnestly desire to foster that faith. We feel that we can be a pal and a help to the boy."

An Honorary Member.

So Tom is to be an honorary member of the Disabled Veterans.

Tom never knew his father. He is only a character from a hero-story to him. He knows that his father was the twenty-sixth man to enlist in the Lafayette Escadrille, Franco-American aviation unit; that he distinguished himself in the war and was decorated by the French government for bravery.

He knows, too, that his father was credited with raising $4,000,000 during the Victory Loan drive. He distinguished himself by flying over the German front and dropping copies of Wilson's declaration of war speech.

But something happened to Hewitt after the war. Few people know the story. He died in poverty and his body seemed destined to lie in Potter's Field. But the National Press Club Post of the American Legion heard of his death from heart attack in a rooming house here, and with the co-operation of the Disabled Veterans and other organizations, gave him a burial in Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors.

Tom Didn't Cry.

Tom was there when the bugler blew "taps." He held the flag that draped the casket. He didn't cry, for to him, the ceremony was simply an honor to his father.

And now, when veterans parade, Tom goes along with them, and he will probably carry the flag at the head of his division. He will attend their meetings if he has no studying to do and as often as his mother will let him.

And maybe some day the D. A. V. will see Tom through college. The veterans' organization has scholarships available for young men they think are most likely to succeed. They believe Tom will make a name for himself in the world and they propose to help him do it.

Next August he goes to Annapolis with the post for the annual outing, and he will fish, watch midshipmen parade and eat clams.

Odd Fellows Hold Service At Arlington

Dead Members of Lodge Are Honored During Pilgrimage Rites.

From Fort Myer Gate a fleet of cars and buses drove through the winding roads of Arlington Cemetery in the rain yesterday afternoon, and stopped in front of the Amphitheater. The uniformed occupants climbed out to march in the annual pilgrimage of the Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

They planned to march from Fort Myer Gate, this caravan of Odd Fellows from the District and six nearby States, but as they massed for the parade through the cemetery, rain began to fall. Instead, they rode to the Amphitheater, hoisted their flags, and to the tune of "The Batle Hymn of the Republic," marched in solemn procession to the Tomb.

The pilgrimage has become an annual rite. Last year 2,000 Odd Fellows and their friends attended. Yesterday, despite the rain, 1,000 were there.

Grand Master Roscoe Jenkins, standing near the tomb, introduced the speaker, Parke P. Deans, grand sire of the sovereign grand lodge, who said:

"Whatever man may think, whatever men may do, there is One who knows all. Men may pass on and their deeds during life be heard, never remembered. But there is One who knows."

Emma Tress Strobel, president of Rebekah Assembly, read the names of the deceased sisters, and Mrs. Donnie M. Kelly, lady president of the Ladies Auxiliary, past matron, placed a flower on the tomb as each name was read. While Lieut. Col. J. B. Mentzer, department chaplain, read the names of deceased Chevaliers of the Department of Pennsylvania, Chevaliers R. W. Tomlinson placed a flower on the tomb.

The band played another selection and then Lewis L. Beazley, grand high priest, Grand Encampment, said the benediction.

Takoma Play Areas Will Open Today

Three playgrounds in Takoma Park, Md., will be opened today for the summer with a record registration expected by Crescent J. Bride, supervisor of playgrounds. Bride, athletic director at Montgomery Blair High School for the past five years, was formerly connected with playgrounds in New Haven, Conn.

The North Takoma grounds at Albany and Buffalo avenues will be in charge of Miss Aida Fisher. The playground on the Takoma elementary school grounds will be supervised by Miss Edith Hazzard.

The Spring Park grounds at Elm and Poplar avenues will be in charge of Miss Virgin Phipps. Hours are from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. All summer athletic teams will be formed and daily gym classes will be organized.

Funeral Rites Planned Today for Mrs. Mills

Funeral services for Mrs. Audrey Mills, wife of J. H. Mills, who died late Saturday of a heart attack at her home, 27 Franklin street, Hyattsville, will be held at 12:30 p. m. today at her home. Services also will be held at the Herndon (Va.) Baptist Church at 3 p. m., with burial at Herndon.

Mrs. Mills apparently had been in good health. The family had lived in Hyattsville for nearly three years. She was a native of Dranesville, Va.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Mills is survived by five children, one son and four daughters. They are Grayson Mills, of Washington, and Mrs. Thelma Jordan, Mrs. Bernice Hillyard, Miss Dorothy Mills and Miss Margaret Mills, all of Hyattsville. She also leaves a brother, J. C. Wrenn, of Weyers Cave, Va., and a sister, Mrs. O. J. Rogers, of Washington.

Reds Assailed As Elks Hold Flag Day Rites

The Order of Elks, he said, is distinctively American and its destiny is linked with the destiny of the country.

The American form of constitutional government, with its guarantee of freedom of speech and of the right to own property, is the ideal to which the principles of Elkdom are dedicated, Fitzgerald said.

"Any form of philosophy or isms seeking to undermine these principles * * * should be repudiated," he stated.

Music for the program was furnished by the Elks Boys Band. Mrs. Elsie Reilly, soprano, offered selections and led the assembly in the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

Schools to Close For Kramer Rites

Out of respect for Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, first assistant superintendent of schools, who died Thursday of a heart attack, Washington's public schools will be closed today.

Funeral services for Dr. Kramer will be held at 2 p. m. in St. Stephen's and Incarnation Episcopal Church. The Rev. George Fiske Dudley, rector, will officiate, and burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Administrative offices, as well as school rooms will be closed. The Board of Education, however, will meet in special session just before the funeral to draw up resolutions on Dr. Kramer's death.

Thirty school heads, who were Dr. Kramer's colleagues, will be honorary pallbearers. Six cadets from the six senior high schools in the city will serve as active pallbearers.

St. Thomas Pastor Holds First Service

Twelve graduates of St. Thomas the Apostle School, who received their diplomas at exercises Friday night, sat together for a mass yesterday morning at which the parish's new pastor, the Rev. Joseph M. Moran, preached.

Father Moran took charge of the parish three weeks ago, but yesterday's services was the first since his formal appointment.

The new priest came to St. Thomas' Church from the Church of the Assumption, where he was pastor for two years. Before holding that position, Father Moran was assistant pastor at he Church of the Sacred Heart for ten years.

Bishop Speaks To St. Gabriel's '36 Graduates

"Carry on the principles taught through your school years and justify the hopes of your teachers and the sacrifices of your parents and you will be successful," urged the Most Rev. J. M. McNamara, auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore, yesterday, at commencement exercises in St. Gabriel's Church, of which he is pastor.

Declaring to the 83 graduates of the parish school that he could wish them fame, or wealth, but that the search for these is responsible for the ills of the present era, He said it would be better to abide by the teachings of the church for a happier life. He also alluded to supposed communistic leanings of teachers in larger cities and warned of its peril.

The class was the largest in the history of the school, which is under the tutelage of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.

Diplomas were given to the graduates by the Bishop before he spoke. Afterwards he was celebrant at solemn benediction, assisted by the Rev. William Sweeney and the Rev. Louis Albert.

Boys' Clubs Camping Site Is Purchased

1,200 Youths From D.C. to Spend Week There This Summer.

The Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs organization has purchased a 160-acre tract of land as a site for a summer camp, it was learned yesterday. The property is situated on the Potomac River, near Scotland, Md., a few miles above Point Lookout.

It is hoped that the camp will be ready for occupancy by about the middle of July. If ready then, the camp facilities would give 1,200 Washington boys a vacation of one week.

Construction work at the site will start within a few days. It is planned to erect 24 bungalows, each capable of housing eight boys. A mess hall and a recreation hall also will be built.

A nine-room farmhouse on the property will be used this year as headquarters and infirmary. Barns and a small tenant cottage also are included in the property.

A half-mile stretch of beach provides swimming facilities. Tennis courts and a baseball diamond will be laid out and a place provided for track and field sports.

In addition to the Potomac River, two creeks, bounding the property on the north and south, will be available for swimming and canoeing.

If the camp is opened by July 15 there would be time this year for a season of six weeks. The boys would go to the camp in groups of 200, remaining for one-week periods.

The clubs are conducting a drive for funds to maintain the camp and to establish Police Boys Clubs in precincts where they do not now exist.

Foundation Gives Six Fellowships

Six Latin-American fellowships were announced yesterday by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. The stipends, amounting to approximately $2,000 each, will enable the scholars to come to the United States to work on problems of importance to their native countries in collaboration with scholars in this country.

The Latin American awards were endowed by former Senator and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim as one phase of the activities of the foundation.

The recipients are Andres Henestrosa, librarian of the department of foreign relations, Mexico; Prof. Alfredo Banos, jr., physicist of the faculty of physical and mathematical sciences, National University of Mexico; Dr. Pedro J. Bermudez Hernandez, assistant in zoology and paleontology in the University of Havana, Cuba; Prof. Carlos Eugenio Dieulefait, director of the statistical institute of the University of the Literal, Rosario, Argentina; Dr. Enrique Savino, bacteriologist of the institute of bacteriology of the National Department of Hygiene, Buenos Aires, Argentina, and Dr. Adalberto Steeger Schaeffer, chief medical officer of the Arriaran Hospital, Santiago, Chile.

Leap Year Has Proved a 'Flop' On West Coast

By the United Press.

Why filmsters famous for wedding early and often should suddenly go altar shy would puzzle an Einstein, but it's so. Domesticity seems no longer fashionable.

The Jack Oakie-Venita Varden nuptials probably ranked the field in interest. If only because Oakie had been billed for years as a persistent bachelor.

Second honors should go to Frances Farmer and Leif Erikson, who occasioned no little to do in tying the knot, and to Jean Parker, who caused a ripple by slipping off to Las Vegas, Nev., to wed an Eastern newspaperman.

Terry Walker, a young beginner in films, pulled a novel stunt by obtaining a year's suspension of her contract to try out matrimony with a New York musician, the understanding being that if it doesn't work out she'll come back and be an actress.

Healy, et al., Humdrum.

Frances Drake and Howard Hughes; Anne Shirley and John Howard, Fred MacMurray and Lillian Lamont, Jean Harlow and William Powell, Joan Blondell and Dick Powell, Cary Grant and Mary Brian, Henry Fonda and Margaret Sullivan (divorced once), and, believe it or not, John (the great lover) Barrymore and Elaine Barrie.

Charlie Chaplin and Paulette Goddard might also be added, but it is quite possible they are married already. It has been reported and denied so often nobody knows what to believe and neither Chaplin nor Goddard will tell.

Songsmith Cole Porter ("Miss Otis Regrets") is off for Callander, Ontario, burning to see the Dionne quintuplets. To be sure he won't miss, he has a letter of introduction from Jean Hersholt ("the country doctor"), to Dr. Alan Dafoe. Reason for the Porter quint crush is a mystery, unless he has hit upon a rhyme for quintuplet.

Irving Asher, husband of Laura La Plante and head of Warner's British studio, is in town with the lowdown on Errol Flynn's so-called "wide stage experience." Asher says it was confined to small parts with a small stock company. Executive saw and signed Flynn because the north Irishman outwaited him, camping for days in his outer office.

Eggs Go Riding!

Ever hear of "eggs on horseback." Don Ameche and Chef Joseph Raimirez have the lads and lasses on the "Ramona" location nuts about them. Dish is simply a large, juicy steak, two inches thick, with a couple of eggs fried sunnyside up riding high and pretty on top. Seems it's an old Spanish-California custom just coming to light.

Little

"FLYING DOWN TO RIO." RKO-Radia picturization of a play by Anne Caldwell, adapted to the screen by Cyril Hume, H. W. Hanemann and Erwin Gelsey, starring Dolores Del Rio, with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Gene Raymond, Paul Roulien, Blanche Friderici, Walter Walker, Paul Porcasi, Etta Moten, Maurice Black, Armand Kalicz, Eric Blore and Gertrude Nissen. Music by Vincent Youmans. Directed by Thornton Freeland. A revival.

"Flying Down to Rio," at the time of its release notable at a colorful and fast-moving musico-dramatic vehicle for the Latin-American talents of Dolores Del Rio, but now principally memorable as the picture that introduced the dancing partnership of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in "The Carioca," was revived yesterday at the Little Theater before crowds that taxed the capacity of the tiny Ninth street house.

There is much in "Flying Down to Rio" to make it ideal, early-summer entertainment—gay songs, spirited dances, the thrilling spectacle of a chorus of beauties cavorting on the wings of speeding airplanes and story enough to keep the divergent elements of the picture loosely threaded together.

There are, in additiion to the usual requisites of a coherent and interesting narrative, specialties by that deep-throated thrush, Gertrude Niesen, recently here, in person, at the Fox; Alice Gentle, noted concert singer, and Etta Moten, a sepia songstress of the first rank.

But when all is said and done, it no doubt is the extraordinary execution of "The Carioca," a concerted number of noble proportions and some daring, with Astaire and Rogers leading the pack, that puts the punch in this picture. And punch it has to draw back such crowds as yesterday's three years after its release.

The bill is completed by the customary short-reel subjects and news events.

Filmdom's Happiest Trio Sails

Harris & Ewing.

Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels, two of the cinema's most engaging stars, who, of course, in private life, are Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, were among those whose names helped swell the European-bound, week-end passenger lists. With them was their 4-year-old daughter, Barbara Bebe, making her first Atlantic crossing. Here Hollywood's happiest family are shown aboard the Ile de France, bound for London, Scotland and France on a combination business and pleasure trip. Ben and Bebe will fulfill stage engagements and, one suspects, do something about spreading the influence of the gown shop conducted by Bebe and Mrs. "Skeets" Gallagher in Hollywood.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Acting in a Picture.

Hollywood, June 14.

WHEN Gary Cooper and Madeline Carroll were announced for the cast of the flicker, "The General Died at Dawn," Paramount didn't know that John O'Hara, Clifford Odets and Sidney Skolsky would also be in the cast. In fact, we didn't know it either.

Director Lewis Milestone, lunching with Novelist O'Hara, offered him the role of the English newspaperman in the picture. O'Hara almost fitted the part; he was once a newspaperman and, although not English, he insists that he writes it. Odets got the job, merely a bit, for he wrote the screen play, and he believes he is as good as Ben Hecht and Charlie MacArthur. If they are brave enough to appear in their own screen offerings, he is, too, reasoned Odets.

And I got into the picture by being an innocent bystander. That's the truth. I could lie a little—I mean lie plenty—and say that my public, those who saw me with Paul Muni in "Hi, Nellie," demanded a return engagement. But it didn't happen that way.

O'Hara played his bit with Cooper and Carroll. He likes to mingle with movie stars. This particular sequence of "The General Died at Dawn" takes place in the dining car of a Chinese train. O'Hara, sitting at a table, recognizes Gary Cooper (which isn't difficult) at another table and says, "Hello." Cooper returns the greeting and then tells Madeline Carroll who the guy is with this line: "He's an English newspaper man. You can buy him for a bag of salt." The amusing thing about this scene is that Cooper's name in the picture is O'Hara, and John O'Hara has to say to Cooper, "Hello O'Hara." You'd be surprised how awkward it is to call another person by your name. John O'Hara sat in the train for two days to make this scene.

Odets also sits at a table, and as the camera moves up the aisle of the train, it takes his picture. Nothing much, but enough to satisfy Odets' fans. I was on the set for the "Watching Them Make Pictures" column. Odets asked me if I would sit at the table with him.

This meant a return to my picture career, and since I was going back, I wanted to have a scene as good as the one in "Hi, Nellie." Odets had never worked in a flicker before, but I had experience. In fact, I'm the only actor whose applause lasted longer than his appearance on the screen. I am referring to my "Flash Act" in the flicker, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." The night that picture opened at the Rivoli, the newspapermen were good enough to give me a hand. I appeared and they raised their hands to applaud. I disappeared from the screen long before their applause ended.

In order to make this "Sitting at the Table" a longer scene, I said to Director Milestone: "You get into the picture too." I figured that if the director was in the scene he wouldn't make it too brief.

We sat down and arranged a scene. Director Milestone was to sit at the table with Odets. I was to be at the next table, listening to their conversation. Then I was to interrupt. I'm telling you this so you'll know where to look if you really want to see me.

The scene, as played has Odets trying to sell Director Milestone an oil well in China. He tells Milestone, writing on the tablecloth as he talks, there are 1,000 barrels of oil a day, making 7,000 barrels a week, making 210,000 barrels a month . . . Whereupon I lean over the table and try to clinch the argument by shouting to Milestone: "And don't forget there are some months that have 31 days."

This isn't very snappy dialogue, but remember that the train is going through China and we have to discuss something that the picture is about.

We did the scene in two takes, which is something, even if the scene isn't. The cameraman, Victor Milner, rates a bow. He did the best camera work of the season. He made Odets look like Odets and he made me appear almost acceptable. Milestone's face is almost missing from the picture. We had Milestone play the scene with his back to the camera. And when you can make a director do this, then its good direction.

We complete our big scene when the train, as called for in the scenario, comes to a sudden stop. Passengers are tossed about. Odets and I are thrown to the floor. Nice acting, doing falls. We'll be in a Laurel and Hardy comedy next, tossing pies at each other. But as we actors say, "anything for a laugh."

About the Showshops

THOSE glib-tongued and nimble-witted "four clowns in clover," known to the trade as the Yacht Club Boys, singing feature of "Thanks a Million" and "The Singing Kid", will come to the stage of the Earle Theater in person to headline the vaudeville portion of the bill for the week of Friday, June 26. They will follow Edgar Kennedy, the screen comedian, in that spot, according to announcement made yesterday by John J. Payette, zone manager of the Warner Brothers' interests in the Washington territory. Mr. Kennedy will begin dry-cleaning his pestered physimahogany on the Earle stage this Friday.

BELL.

Adler, Kelly, Kern and Mann, who make up the popular nautical quartet, have just completed work on "Stage Struck", the new vehicle for Dick Powell and Joan Blondell. Since 1929 they have been favorites on Broadway and in the smartest night spots. Their flair for composing original comedy songs and parodies created a style that sophisticates found breezy and stimulating. You remember their "I Love to Singa" and "My, How This Country Changes", in Jolson's "Singing Kid".

When they come to the Earle, these landlubber yachtsmen are expected to offer everything in their repertoire, from their much applauded "alphabet song"—the one about the PWA, the NRA, the AAA and all the rest of them—to their "I'm an Indirect Descendant of the Tsar", in which they become Romanoff, Dumbenoff, Tallenoff and Shortenoff, respectively.

Some fun! Eh, Stuff?

A new romantic screen alliance will be introduced to Capital cinemaniacs following the current engagement of Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney in "Fury" at Loew's Palace. It will be composed of Loretta Young, last seen opposite Franchot Tone in "The Unguarded Hour", and Robert Taylor, now on view with Janet Gaynor in "Small Town Girl". The vehicle of their first joint appearance as co-stars will be "Private Number", in which a millionaire's son marries his mother's maid—or something of that sort. "Private Number" supplants "San Francisco", originally announced as the Palace's next bill. "San Francisco", with Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy and Jack Holt, will come after, maybe, after.

The 1936 screen version of Edna Ferber's "Show Boat", now in its fourth week at RKO-Keith's, is the film selected by the National Screen Council as winner of the Boxoffice Blue Ribbon Award for May. The year's other monthly winners, to date, are "A Tale of Two Cities", "The Story of Louis Pasteur", "The Country Doctor" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town", in the order named, beginning with January.

Speaking of "The Country Doctor", there is a movement on foot to have a prominent university bestow an honorary degree in medicine upon Jean Hersholt in recognition of his sterling work in that picture. His next is "Sins of Man", opening at Loew's Fox on Friday.

Don Ameche, playing second lead with Hersholt in "Sins of Man", never had a bad break in his life. He was signed by Darryl Zanuck for Twentieth Century-Fox Pictures by wire, after having received his first break with a Wisconsin stock company and later scoring a hit in radio as the result of an audition he took while waiting for a friend, or a street car, or something, at the studio. Twentieth Century-Fox grabbed him on the strength of another company's screen test, caught by an agent at a "sneak" preview. The agent negotiated his contract by telegraph.

The Roadside Theater's second bill of the season, opening June 29 for two weeks, will be Augustin Daly's famous melodrama of "Under the Gaslight". The season's inaugural occurs tonight, with Jules Verne's "Around the World in 80 Days" the pretentious offering.

As the second production of Robert Porterfield's Barter Theater in Abingdon, Va., "Mrs. Moonlight," by Benn Levy, will be presented on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of this week. If you haven't the price in cash, farm produce and provender will buy your ticket—that's what "Barter Theater" means.

Another chatty letter from Anne Ayres, written on the letterhead of Lawrence Langner's Westport Country Playhouse—which she helped establish—says, in part: "I have been surrounded by Hollywood news and gossip the past week, for Paula Stone, Charles Collins and Dorothy Stone (Mrs. Collins) have been here with rare reports. I wonder if the picture Dorothy did, 'Revolt of the Zombies', or some such title, has come to Washington? If only you could hear her stories of the taking of that picture! And the dialogue she had to speak! Looks as if Charlie Collins has landed in pictures through his 'Dancing Pirate', although he says it was a badly arranged film. Paula is coming out in something of the Civil War period—'Secret Service' may be the title. Of all the Stones, Fred is the one who most likes Hollywood, which amuses the rest of us, no end. Carol, my Easthampton protegee—and she will be a star or I am no prophet—is up at Mount Kisco in summer stock. Lawrence Langer has some good things for Westport—Eva Le Gallienne, McKay Morris and Rex O'Malley in Congreve's 'Love for Love'; Grace George in a new comedy and Jimmy Savo in Moliere's 'Would Be Gentleman', worth going far to see, that last one."

Back-to-Nature Note.

Announcement that Katharine Hepburn will open here in Helen Jerome's dramatization of Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre" gives rise to the suspicion that her management is not doing right by our Katie. First they sink her in "The Lake" and now they give her the "Eyre!"

United States Bureau of Fisheries has been given the job of arranging a "gentlemen's agreement" among fishermen as a result of the new whaling treaty and of making recommendations for the conservation of this fast-disappearing species.

A "gentlemen's agreement," it was pointed out, is a lot more effective than policing the waters for violations. That is the way the halibut treaty restricting the catches on this fish has been enforced along the coasts. No police force awaits an offender when he lands, but other fishermen soon report violations. Fisheries Bureau officials said, and the law-breaker cannot license his boat the next year.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Messrs. Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris confess themselves well pleased with the trade that sends Jake Powell to the Yankees and brings Ben Chapman to the Nats' outfield, but I am wondering how the Washington infielders are taking the new development.

POVICH.

As long as Wild Horse Jake was a member of the Washington cast, the Nats' infielders were comparatively safe from spike wounds, fractured forearms, broken ribs and other of Powell's pet inflictions, but now, by their own hand, Griffith and Harris have exposed Joe Kuhel, Buddy Myer, Ossie Bluege, Red Kress and Buddy Lewis to the ravages of the wild man of the base paths.

However, Messrs. Harris and Griffith could hardly be expected to consult their infielders on the advisability of the trade. Those gents are supposed to take care of themselves when guys like Powell, with spikes gleaming and nostrils flaring come charging into the bases. It's something to think about, though, and this department is grateful that this department is not personally troubled by the possibilities.

The trade itself leaves this department a wee bit cold. Methinks the Nats were mildly stung on the trade despite the elation of Messrs. Harris and Griffith. That .289 batting average of Chapman's last season compared to Powell's .312 figure, and that anemic .266 figure that Chapman is boasting thus far this year in contrast with Powell's .293 looks just a bit suspicious to me, although I am naturally suspicious.

One full season and a third of another is a rather long slump for any ball player, but that is Chapman's case. I'd like a little guarantee that it is a slump and not Chapman's true hitting stride as one former member of the Yankees, who apparently does not like the fellow, rose to remark when the subject came up.

It's hard to forget Chapman as a swell ball player. Not so many seasons ago he was a wow with the Yanks, and he's still shy of 28 years. But it's not easy to pass up Powell's two-year performance in a Washington uniform. Powell was a fixture in the Washington outfield from the day he set foot in the line-up, a swell ball hawk, an apparent natural .300 hitter with a long term of .300 hitting ahead of him.

There certainly could be no complaint with Powell's performances with Washington. He still is a dangerous hombre up there at the plate, on the bases and in the outfield. But, as I was saying, there is room for suspicion that Chapman is not the consistently good hitter that his early years in the league indicated.

If either club was bilked in the deal, then it was not by a great margin. Out there in the outfield, Chapman shades Powell by no mean edge. Their throwing arms should not be mentioned in the same inhalation, what with Powell a scatter-armed fellow and not so strong with his heaves, either, and Chapman possessing one of the finest arms in the business.

There is also the little matter of throwing to the wrong base, of which Powell has been guilty in the past.

On the bases, it looks like a standoff, with the edge, if any, favoring Powell. Chapman is a wee bit the faster, but he is not as bold as Jake and neither does he possess Powell's apparently charmed life on the base paths. I've seen Powell take the most absurd chances and get away with extra bases because of his downright lucky fates. Other guys, Chapman included, would be tethered to the bases.

But what, I suppose, is this department's No. 1 aversion to the deal is the loss of Powell's colorful personality to a ball club that boasted no other performer with the exception of Red Kress who could transform a dull ball game into a spectacle. Powell was a godsend to us writing guys who for years strained a gut trying to find a colorful ball player on the Washington team.

In Short—

Baseball makes strange teammates . . . casting as it does Earl Whitehill, who was punched; Ben Chapman, who punched him, and Buddy Myer, who vowed eternal vengeance against Chapman, on the same team . . . One angle to the Chapman-Powell trade is the fact that Chapman drew down a $10,000 salary with a bonus clause while with the Yankees, and Powell was playing for Washington for only $6,500 per annum . . . both players will receive a salary raise with their new clubs, as is customary . . . poor Powell . . . traded from a team that was a 30-to-1 shot to the team that is the favorite to win the pennant . . . Powell's share of a winning World Series would nearly equal his yearly salary . . . and then, again, figure out Chapman's probable loss in World Series spoils . . . the Washington club is now three players under the 23-player limit of the league . . . Griffith attempted desperately to obtain Pitchers Walter Brown or Johnny Broaca from the Yankees but failed with the trading deadline only 24 hours distant . . . The Powell-Chapman trade summed up: In a desperate attempt to bolster his pitching staff, Clark Griffith yesterday traded Outfielder Jake Powell to the Yankees in exchange for Outfielder Ben Chapman.

New Orleans Bout Tonight for Sarron

New York, June 14 (AP).—The 15-round heavyweight clash at the Yankee Stadium Thursday night between Max Schmeling, of Germany, and Joe Louis, Detroit brown bomber, is far and away the outstanding event on next week's national boxing program.

The only other bout of importance will feature Petey Sarron, new N. B. A. featherweight champion from Alexandria, Va., in a non-title engagement with Nick Camarata, of New Orleans, at New Orleans, tomorrow night. It will be Sarron's first appearance since his victory over Freddie Miller, former champion.

Schmeling Is Rated in Top Condition

Teuton Confident, Unlike Most of Negro's Other Opponents.

By the United Press.

Napanoch, N. Y., June 14.—Max Schmeling indulged in his eighteenth workout in five weeks today and was given an "A" ranking on the three big "Cs"—condition, confidence, courage—a fighter must have to be triumphant in the ring.

Yet the former heavyweight champion still isn't conceded much of a chance in his international bout against Joe Louis, dark destroyer from Detroit, in Yankee Stadium Thursday night. Only 1 out of every 100 give him a ghost of a chance. But if he were fighting any other man—even Heavyweight Champion James J. Braddock—the German probably would be the fatvorite. He seems to have the equipment to beat anyone except Louis.

In "Greatest" Condition.

Rain drove Schmeling indoors today for his next to last boxing session before facing the devastating fists of the Brown Bomber. Before his workout, which drew a crowd of 1,000, Schmeling was given a physical examination by Dr. William H. Walker, New York State Athletic Commission physician.

Louis Tapers Off.

Lakewood, N. J., June 14 (AP).—Six rounds of boxing today wound up the heaviest part of Joe Louis' preparations for his battle with Max Schmeling Thursday. The "Detroit destroyer," taking things easy, sparred a round each with Bud Schildknecht and Salvatore Ruggirello and two each with young George Godfrey and Frank Wotanski. Only in occasional flurries did he display any of the ferocity and punching power he showed Saturday.

Tomorrow is listed as a day of rest and he will taper off Tuesday. He is not expected to box more than a round or two more before the fight, confining his efforts to road work, shadow boxing, bag punching and calisthenics.

Six Hurlers Wilt; Cards Beat Phils

St. Louis, June 14 (AP).—In a wild scoring contest which called for the services of a half dozen pitchers, including Paul Dean, who was knocked out of the box in the third inning, the Cardinals were victorious in completing a home stand here today, breaking an eighth-inning tie to defeat Jimmy Wilson's Philadelphia Phillies, 12 to 10.

Levi Yoder, Mrs. Meckley Look For Larger Fields to Conquer

By Dave Herman.

Two Washington champions—Levi Yoder, of Kenwood, crowned Middle Atlantic titleholder, and Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring, successful in defense of her Maryland crown—today looked forward to new and bigger fields to conquer.

Both came through with impressive victories Saturday, Yoder trimming Morton McCarthy, of Norfolk, defending champion, 2 and 1, at Five Farms, and Mrs. Meckley defeating Mrs. Leo Walper, of Kenwood, 5 and 4, at Suburban Country Club.

Yoder, now the toast of Kenwood, admitted last night that his big ambition is to win a qualifying place in the National Amateur trials at Columbia in August, and then step out in the championship proper at Garden City in September.

It now appears that Yoder will be the man to succeed Roger Peacock as the District's ranking golfer, unless the Rajah returns shortly. With the District championship scheduled in September, Yoder hopes to keep his sticks blazing for this all-important event.

Late this month Yoder will be at Hillendale to play in the Maryland State Amateur. A victory in the Maryland event and the District and he will have achieved a "grand slam" for this section.

They gave Mrs. Meckley a testimonial dinner last night at Indian Spring Club, and all the club stars turned out.

At the dinner Mrs. Meckley, winner of the Middle Atlantic, District and Maryland championships, said that her big goal was the National Women's Championship, which will be played in New York this fall. Four years ago she lost in the first round to the eventual winner, Virginia Van Wie.

Mrs. Robinson Wins City Net Laurels

The cool, unhurried court tactics of Mrs. Margaret Carsteken Robinson, former thirteenth ranking player of the country, carried her to a 6—3, 7—5 victory over tall, tanned Edith Clarke yesterday, thereby to the eighth annual City of Washington tennis championship.

Both Mrs. Robinson and Miss Clarke weathered three matches during the day, combining in the afternoon to win the city doubles title held by Sara Moore and Mrs. Dorette Miller. In the morning they won a semi-final match from Mrs. Peggy Keyser Smith and Mrs. Bobsey Turney, 6—0, 6—3 and in the afternoon defeated the defending champions in the finals, 6—1 6—4.

The latter victory came as further tribute to Mrs. Robinson after her impressive triumph over Miss Clarke in the morning.

Displaying the same shrewd game which carried her to the final round, the wife of the star Army player, Lieut. Stanley R. Robinson, outmaneuvered her harder-stroking rival to win with the comparative ease of a straight-set victory.

Mrs. Robinson ascended to the title won last year by Sara Moore, who was eliminated in the semi-finals by Miss Clarke. The new champion was seeded No. 3, and Miss Clarke No. 1. Mrs. Robinson eliminated the District's No. 1 ranking player, Mary Cootes, of Alexandria, second seeded player of the tournament, in the semifinals.

While Miss Clarke's stroking was her chief reliance, her power and speed were more than offset by her opponent's clever engineering tactics. After sweeping through the first set, Mrs. Robinson went on to lead 4—1 in the second chapter.

Her change of pace, her consistent, able return of Miss Clarke's booming service and her angling of shots were more than enough to set the pace.

Mrs. Robinson, former chamjion of West Virginia, had things so much her own way that she preferred not to go to the net where she has consistently shone throughout the tournament.

Welsh-Reese Net Match Is Postponed by Rain

West Hartford, Conn., June 14. (AP). The final round match of the New England men's tennis championships scheduled for today between Bernard F. Welsh, of Rockville, Md., and William Reese, of the University of North Carolina, was postponed for the second consecutive day on account of rain.

Cubs Defeat Bees, 3-1; Run Streak to 11

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 14.—A pair of homers by Frank Demare cashed in on airtight pitching by Lon Warneke today and the spreeing Cubs continued their way toward the top of National League affairs by beating Boston again, 3 to 1, for their eleventh straight victory.

In sweeping the four-game series with the Bees, the Cubs ended their home stay with a record of 15 victories in the 19 games.

Demaree's homers accounted for all the Cubs' runs. The first, which sailed over the leftfield wall, came in the second inning after Ken O'Dea had singled; the other which landed in the leftfield bleacher, followed in the fourth frame. His sixth and seventh round-trippers of the season, they extended his hitting streak to 13 consecutive games.

John Lanning, Boston freshman right-hander, was the victim of both blows. The Cubs got seven hits off him and Dan MacFayden, the same number Warneke yielded.

Wilmer Hines Beaten By 18-Year-Old Riggs

Kansas City, June 14 (AP).—Young Bobby Riggs, of Los Angeles, won the Missouri Valley tennis singles title today by upsetting the nationally ranked Wilmer Hines, 6—3, 6—2, 6—1.

The 18-year-old Californian, national junior singles champion, won the junior title of the tournament Friday.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 14 (AP).—The Athletics closed their home stand today by taking their third game in four from the Cleveland Indians, 8 to 6. Home runs played a major role in the scoring.

Bob Johnson featured a five-run lambasting the Mackmen gave Oral Hilderbrand in the first inning by hitting for the circuit with the bases filled. It was the Cherokee's fourth home run of the series and seventh of the season.

Not to be outdone, the Redskins fell on Lee Ross, their tormentor of the first six innings and registered five runs and came within one of tying the score in the seventh. Hale opened this attack with a home run to the roof of the leftfield stands.

Knickerbocker, pinch-hitter Pytlak and Hughes then singled in succession for another run and Jimmy Gleeson poled a homer over the rightfield fence, scoring the fifth run of the inning behind Pytlak and Hughes.

Pudgy Max Baer Starts Out Again

Salt Lake City, June 14 (AP).—Max Baer, fat but years short of 40, will climb back into the hempen enclosure tomorrow night to attempt a comeback.

The once heavyweight boxing champion of the world motored to Salt Lake City from the Pacific Coast, caught up on his sleep and proceeded to "beat up" a couple of sparring partners, including his brother, Buddy.

Baer, weighing some 225 pounds, will tangle with Tony Souza, a San Francisco heavyweight, in a six-round headline bout at McCullough's arena, seating capacity, 4,500.

Ancil Hoffman, Baer's manager, said he has arranged several bouts throughout the West, building up the erstwhile playboy for a fling at bigger game.

Nats Swap Powell Even to New York For Ben Chapman

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Rough-hewn Jake Powell, base-running idol of Washington fans, yesterday was traded to the New York Yankees in an even exchange for fleet-footed Ben Chapman.

After withholding Powell from yesterday's game in order to avoid possible injury that would balk the trade, Owner Clark Griffith of the Nats announced the deal, in which, he said, no cash figured.

The Washington club thus loses its only home-bred ball players, who in less than two seasons of play in the big leagues has become known as the scourge of the base paths with his rampant, helter-skelter style of running.

Powell Leading Base Stealer.

Now leading the league's base stealers with 11 thefts, Powell goes to the Yankees in exchange for an outfielder who is in the throes of a two-year batting slump. The 28-year-old Chapman, who batted only .289 last season, is still untracked this year with a .286 average at the present writing.

Powell, the former Takoma Park sandlotter, celebrated his first season in the majors last year with a .312 batting average and now is batting .293 for 52 games.

Both Powell and Chapman are right-handed hitters and throwers. Powell a year younger than the man who set a new modern big league record for base stealers when he stole 61 bases in 1931.

That season was Chapman's greatest year with the Yankees. He batted .315, with a generou sprinkling of extra-base hits included in his record.

Chapman brings to the Washington outfield a throwing arm far superior to Powell's, which was neither strong or accurate. The former Yankee is regarded as one of the three best throwers in the league and enemy base runners hold due respect for his talents.

Looks to Long Hits.

Behind the trade was Griffith's desire to capitalize on Chapman's extra-base hitting potentialities and the Yankees willingness to part with a player for whom Manager Joe McCarthy had no great liking.

Tales of a McCarthy-Chapman rift have been rampant through the American League for two seasons and Chapman's loss of popularity in New York as a result of his protracted hitting slump has provided McCarthy with ample excuse for the trade.

Well-defined suspicions are also held in New York that the temperamental Chapman has become increasing envious of the popularity of the rookie Joe DiMaggio in the Yankees' outfield and thus incurred more of McCarthy's wrath.

Powell and Chapman are known throughout the league as colorful performers. The trade brings back to Washington the man against who Capital fans rose in 1932 when he slugged Earl Whitehill and blackened the pitcher's eye during the "riot" game in May of that year.

Spiking Started Trouble.

Chapman precipitated the tempestous proceedings when he spiked Buddy Myer sliding into second base, cutting a long gash in Myer's leg. Myer, on rising, kicked Chapman several times while the Yankee speedster was still prone

Nats Bow, 6-4, On Misplay By Kress

Washington lost another ball game yesterday and the guilty party was, of all people, Red Kress.

The Nats and Pete Appleton were in a fair way toward beating the Chicago White Sox; in fact they had done nobly to acquire a 3-2 lead going into the seventh inning, but the White Sox came out of the inning with four runs and the ball game.

The final score was 6-4, but it would have read 4-2 in favor of Washington had Kress held onto a ball pitched to second base by Appleton in that seventh inning, when the Sox collected four runs with the aid of only two hits.

It was a compound muff by Kress and the Nats. Kress muffed the ball and the Nats, with fourth place beckoning after the scoreboard showed Cleveland's defeat by the A's, muffed a chance to climb in the league standings.

Lets in Tying Run.

Appleton was seemingly over his biggest hurdle when, with none out in the seventh and two on base by virtue of walks, Joe Kuhel converted Piet's bunt into a force-play at third base. The tension eased considerably when Haas bounced a ball back into the pitcher's box and then the 5,000 gasped as Kress, covering second, permitted Appleton's throw to sail into centerfield.

The pitcher's heave to second was not perfect, but it was not wild. In some incredible manner Kress, the fielding hero of recent weeks, failed to make the catch and the tying run scored. After Bonura popped up for the second out, Mike Kreevich smacked a triple into rightfield, where Cecil Travis took a nose dive in the mud in a futile attempt to catch the ball, and two more runners scored.

With Buck Newson bringing a halt to the Chicago scoring in the last two innings, the Nats gave the 5,000 a parting but false thrill in the ninth when they fil

Rain interfered with the scramble for the championship of the National City League of The Post Association yesterday but not enough to prevent the Heurich Brewers from going into a tie for first place in Section A by trouncing Woodmen of the World, Elm Camp, 9 to 1, on the East Ellipse.

While more than 3,000 stubborn fans stood in an intermittent drizzle, the Beermen pulled a mass attack on Charlie Booker, mature pitcher of the Woodmen, to crowd across seven runs in the fourth inning which were easily enough to win the ball game in view of the pitching Bob Lyons was demonstrating with his able left arm.

The crucial affray for the league leadership scheduled between the Blue Flame Valets and the Heurich Brewers was postponed because of the weather as was that between the Shady Grove Barbecue Club and Plaza Wine & Liquor.

Nolan Motors in First.

All four clubs preferred not to risk games on the treacherous surface. After a conference on Diamond No. 9 in West Potomac Park, Manager Eddie Dove of the Barbecues and Manager Phil Sykes of the Plazas consulted Umpire George Watt and it was agreed to postponement.

In Section B, Nolan Motors went into undisputed possession of first place merely by standing idle due to the forfeiture of franchise of Woodmen of the World, Oak Camp. Ross Jewelers missed a chance to stay in the lead by dropping a 5-to-3 decision to District Grocers.

Old Manhattan Beer went into a four-way tie for second place with National Novelty, the Jewelers and the Grocers by stopping Regal Clothing, 11 to 7.

Booker and Lyons were locked in a mound duel until that fourth inning, when the Brewers cut loose. Zahn, Knight and Thompson singled in a row and Manager Fee Colliere then contributed a triple to the cause. Booker added a walk for Everett Russell and Huck Stahl and Lyons added singles to complete the inning's damage and drive in the sixth and seventh runs.

Lyons allowed seven scattered hits, missing a shut-out when George scored from first when Ralph Bennie let Friedmeyer's ground drive go through him for two bases.

Successive singles by Colliere and Russell, who had a perfect day at bat, and Lyons accounted for the other Heurich runs in the eighth.

The Jewelers passed out of the Section B lead beneath a five-run assault in the fifth inning by the Grocers. Shapiro with three-for-four led the Grocer 10-hit offensive.

Charles Town Race Track, June 14.

Dear Al:

The recent failure of the McCann bill to pass the N. Y. State Senate was hailed with joyous shouting by tipsters and chiselers throughout the country. The bill, had it become law, would have prevented the various "games" that the racketeers have been playing on race-goers for years. Had the action been taken in New York to rid racing of these parasites, the battle against them probably would have been carried on throughout the Nation. Now the sharpsters can go on printing their cards after five races, giving them out as the crowd leaves the tracks. They also can go in for advertising calling attention to "$68.50" winners, as usual using a different name in each publication. One well-known outfit which prints two tip cards in Maryland, sells only one each day and "bulldogs" the other. "Bulldogging" is the name given a card that is printed after the races are over on a fast press near the track. I know of only two tip cards that have always been on the level. The two major scratch sheets, which also give selections, of course, have never been questioned. These "jockey brother" ads and the like are strictly the bunko. The tracks know these fakers are working at their gates and they should be the ones to put a stop to these practices.

BILL.

First race—Busy Tony comes off a long race, but I'm going to take him here. He was forced to run on the outside all the way on that occasion. Better racing luck and an off track may see him scoring. Spear appears ready to make a serious effort in this company. Brown Hat may need a fast track to show his best.

Second race — Povel is a speedy filly and she has had a long rest. Needs only a good ride to defeat these. Truthfully is a hard luck maiden and is dangerous. Skyride to take care of the others.

Third race—Au Foin hasn't run his real race at this track. I expect a big improvement tomorrow. Lady Cirek's last was a dull effort, but she had some trouble. Tell It would be dangerous if in action.

Fourth race—Forest Faun was given a miserable ride last out. With a change of riders, I expect this one to show a winning effort. Ogle will like the going and is a possible surprise. Huppy, still a maiden, has a fighting chance.

Fifth race—Ada Wan has the early speed that counts so heavily in these short sprints. Her last was excellent. Scout Brigade and Nay Nay for the place and show. Barnstormer may fool the boys and run on an off track.

Sixth race — McKell may reverse the decision on Jakovia in this race. The latter saved ground entering the stretch while McKell was forced wide when last they met. Wise Sister for the show.

Seventh race—Porphyry loves the route and the track and always runs for Johnny Shanks. Hot Cake and Jobakheta to take care of the others.

Best Bet—McKell.

Giants Shut Out Bucs, 8-0, Halt Slump

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 14.—Hal Schumacher held the Pirates to five hits today and the New York Giants ended their five-game losing streak by blanking the Bugs, 8 to 0.

Thirty-two thousand spectators, the largest crowd of the season here, saw Schumacher halt the Bucs' seven-game winning mark. Arky Vaughan's single was the only clean blow made off the New York hurler. The other four Pirate swats were infield taps.

Battalino, Cowboy Scott in 10-Round Bout at Stadium Tonight

Styles of Two Are Exactly Opposite

The paths of Cowboy Howard Scott, an ambitious young Western lightweight, and Battling Battalino, an equally ambitious, although not so young, pug from Connecticut, will cross at Griffith Stadium tonight.

The crossing is expected to cause quite a collision as the styles of the two gladiators, who have been optimistically scheduled to go ten rounds, are exactly opposite and each should serve to bring out the best in the other.

Scott, while a willing and very courageous fighter, does not always make what may be called a hair-raising fight. Often when he is fighting his best he looks as though he was not doing too much. This is attributable to his custom of countering and stabbing with a long left.

Batalino Is Colorful.

Battalino crowds continually, firing real knockout punches from all angles. He will keep chasing Scott, who will score effectively as he retreats. The question is whether Battalino will land a knockout punch before Scott wears him down to a slow walk with his counterpunches.

One of the most colorful fighters in the modern ring, Battalino has run the gamut of experience within the squared circle, but has his sights set on one more honor. National amateur featherweight champion in 1927, world featherweight title-holder in 1929, the Battler renounced his crown in 1932 because of difficulty in making weight.

He has recently started a comeback for two reasons. Reason number 1—he loves to fight and is not happy away from the game, even though his personal fortune runs well into six figures.

Seeks Lightweight Title.

Reason No. 1—Battalino has his heart set on winning the lightweight championship now in the possession of Tony Canzoneri. Batt's wily manager, Peter (The Fox) Reilly, believes the Hartford, Conn., fighting machine has a chance to do this with the current crop of lightweights in control of the situation.

Scott, by virtue of many upset victories here, in Baltimore and in Richmond, is on the verge of bouncing into national prominence. New York promoters have been watching his work very closely of late and he has been offered one shot in the big city which he was forced to decline because of previous engagements.

A victory for the cowboy over Battalino probably would result in his receiving another offer to perform in Gotham—and thus might he be given an impetus that might lead him to the lightweight crown.

POST PREDICTIONS.

MAIN EVENT—Howard Scott, Texas, vs. Bat Battalino, Hartford, Conn., lightweights; 10 rounds. Rated B. The same rating as given last week's heavyweight tussle between Marty Gallagher and Bob Tow—and deservedly so. If ever two fighters were made to make each other look good, the Cowboy and Bat are the two. Picking this one is as tough as picking a prickly pear off a cactus bush. Battalino will be tearing in from bell to bell, throwing knockouts from both hands. Scott will counter cooly, fighting better than usual because he is being crowded. Because Howard is in a winning streak, we like him to barely shade one of the greatest crowd-pleasers the ring ever has known.

SEMIFINAL—Lew Raymond, Baltimore, vs. Roddy Davis, Washington, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Another tough one to call. Just on general principles, we shall string along with Davis, but don't quote us.

Ritchie Mack, Texas, vs. Stanford Carrier, Washington. Rated B. This one isn't so tough. Mack has too much experience for Carrier, who is being rushed too fast.

2 Women's Swim Marks Are Beaten

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 14.—Two American long-course women's swimming records fell in a Metropolitan A. A. U. championship meet at Manhattan Beach today but the looked-for return engagement between Mrs. Eleanor Holm Jarrett, the Olympic backstroke champion and holder of many records, and Erna Kompa failed to materialize when Mrs. Jarrett did not appear.

Miss Kompa set a new 300-meter long-course mark of 4:28.4 for the backstroke race and passed the 200-meter mark in the record time of 2:54.5. The old American records were 2:56.4 for 200 meters, made by Mrs. Jarrett and 4:33.1 for 300 meters, made by Miss Kompa.

Olympic Trials Won by 12 D.C. Canoeists

By John R. Vosburgh.

The Washington Canoe Club completed the process yesterday of taking 12 of the 21 qualifying places for the final Olympic canoeing trials allotted the Middle States Division of the American Canoeing Association.

Dominating the divisional trials on the chocolate Potomac for the second straight day, the Capital canoeists won three of the four 1,000-meter races and qualified four additional entries by taking at least seconds or thirds. The Washington club had qualified five entries Saturday in the three 10,000-meter events.

Bespectacled Ed Trilling bolstered the hopes of the Capital paddlers for the final Olympic tests in Philadelphia, June 27 and 28, by winning both the one man double-blade and one man single-blade races.

Washington entries swept the one man double-blade in one, two, three order. Trilling won by two seconds or a scant length over his club-mate Bill Rhodes with Bill Havens, third. The towering Trilling likewise captured the single-blade struggle by even a more comfortable margin, winning by four seconds from Woodward of the Philadelphia Canoe Club.

Knight, Long Win Again.

The veteran Harry Knight, of the Washington Club, and his tandem partner, John Long, followed up their Saturday victory in the 10,000-meter double-blade race by annexing the tandem double-blade over the short course. They finished in a runaway with Fred Wilke and John Haas, of Tacony, Pa., second.

The tandem single-blade race went to the National Marathon champions, Stan Cemokowski and Frank Krick, of the Cacawa Canoe Club, Tacony, Pa., who won by several lengths from Knight and Dick Ackad. This event, however, marked Knight's third successful attempt to qualify for the Olympic trials.

None of the races either Saturday or yesterday came close to prevailing records except the tandem single-blade in which Cemokowski and Krick finished in 4:47. Rain and rough water hampered the crews both days.

Incidentally, this marks the first year that canoeing has been an Olympic event since 1924 when the Washington Canoe Club carried the United States to victory at Paris.

(All races 1,000 meters.)

One man double-blade—Won by Edward Trilling (Washington Canoe Club), 4.49; second, W. J. Rhodes (Washington Canoe Club), 4:51; third, W. D. Havens, jr. (Washington Canoe Club), 5:00.

Tandem double-blade—Won by Harry Knight and John Long (Washington Canoe Club), 4:49; second, Fred Wilke and John Haas (Tunkhannock, Tacony, Pa.), 4:55; third, Russell Swann and W. J. Rhodes (Washington Canoe Club, 4:57.

One man single-blade—Won by Edward Trilling (Washington Canoe Club), 5:04; second, Woodward (Philadelphia Canoe Club), 5:08; third, Al Bauer (Philadelphia Canoe Club), 5:25.

Tandem single-blade—Won by Stanley Cemokowski and Frank Krick (Cacawa Canoe Club, Tacony, Pa.); second, Harry Knight and Dick Ackad (Washington Canoe Club), 4:58.; third, Russell McKnight and Robert raf (Philadelphia Canoe Club) 5:03.

Nationwide supported the six-hit pitching of Lewis with nine bingles to give the Versis Product Club its first defeat of the season.

The Southerners bunched nine hits effectively to win an 8-3 decision from the District Midgets, although the latter accumulated seven safeties off Carroll Alexander. Southern moundsman. The District club used three pitchers.

38 Seek District Tennis Title Today

One of the largest fields in the history of the District women's tennis championship will get under way today at the Columbia Country Club when 38 entries play opening round matches in the 1936 event.

Mary Cootes, tall, powerful-stroking Alexandria girl, will be defending the championship she won last year. Miss Cootes is seeded No. 1 and Edith Clarke, finalist in the recent City of Washington tournament, No. 2.

Other seeded players include Sara Moore, No. 3; Mary Ryan, No. 4; Grace Parker, No. 5; Mrs. Dorette Mille, No. 6; Anne Williams, of Baltimore, No. 7, and Anne Dayette, of Baltimore, No. 8.

Miss Cootes begins defense of her title against Eleanor Craven at 4 p. m. Miss Clarke's opening match will be a preliminary round encounter with Ruth Sowers at 2 p. m. Miss Moore's first match takes her against Ethel Shamer in the first round at 2 p. m.

Entries for the doubles championship, held by Miss Cootes and Mrs. Bobsey Turney, must be in the hands of Mrs. H. Clay Thompson or Tom Frydell, club professional, by tonight at 6 p. m. Play will start tomorrow.

Maryland Poloists Beat Ft. Myer Four

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., June 14.—The Maryland Polo Club rallied in the final minutes of play to defeat the Sixteenth Field Artillery from Fort Myer this afternoon by a score of 9 to 8.

The line ups:

$25,000,000 Com. Credit Co. Pfd. on Market

4¼% Issue to Retire 5½%; Stock Is Priced at $101.75.

A $25,000,000 refinancing and exchange operation for Commercial Credit Co. to retire the entire 5½ per cent convertible preferred stock, increase working capital, and enable capital stock to provide a larger proportion of the funds required to finance the company's increased volume of business, will be initiated today with the offering of $25,000,000 of 4¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock at $101.75 per share. The offering is underwritten by 38 banking firms representing all sections of the country, and headed by the First Boston Corporation and Kidder, Peabody & Co.

Holders of the company's 5½ per cent convertible preferred have the right to exchange their present stock on the basis of one share of the present 5½ per cent convertible preferred for one share of the new 4¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred plus 3-20ths of a share of common. This right expires June 23. The prospectus states that the 5½ per cent convertible preferred is expected to be called for redemption on July 31 at $110 per share, plus dividends for from July 1 to the date set for redemption.

Subject to the exchange rights of the holders of the 5½ per cent convertible preferred with respect to a part of the new stock, the entire $25,000,000 of the new 4¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock is being offered today. The amount of new ¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred which will be available to the public will not be determined until expiration of the exchange period.

The new 4¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock will become the first and only preferred stock of the company upon completion of the exchange and redemption. Each share of 4¼ per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock is convertible, at the option of the holder, into shares of common stock at the rate of one share of common stock for each $68.40 par value of such preferred stock if converted on or before June 30, 1941, and at the rate of one share of common stock for each $74.10 par value of such prefererd stock if converted after June 30, 1941, such right to cease, however, as to any shares called for redemption at the close of business on the tenth day prior to the date fixed for such redemption.

Stocks Again Edge Forward With Continuing Favorable Industrial News.

New York, June 14.—Until certain reforms in trading practice were put into effect and later the Federal Reserve authorities began to take a hand in credit allocation to speculators, the stock market prospered fairly well under the New Deal. Before the New Dealers came into office the market had progressed some distance from its worst, largely because the bottom of the business depression already had been scraped.

That rise, which began in the latter part of 1932, was accelerated when as among its first acts the New Deal took inflationary steps with respect to the currency, commodity price management and unbalanced budgets.

Since then, in spite of many handicaps, the stock market has made progress, but with much unevenness as the winds blew hot or cold on inflation or as trade recovery gathered headway or slackened. For the past few months the motive power has been mainly that of business recovery, helped by limits placed on New Deal policies through Supreme Court decisions. The inflation hope has been at least deferred, but it still hovers in the background.

Anxiety over the future persists nevertheless because it is realized that the time is fast growing near when the great spending efforts of the New Dealers must be settled with cash, and that must come from heavy tax collections on business and individuals. Business enterprise is held back because of the fear that taxation will shut off profits.

Stop Spending.

What concerns the business and banking world now, and more indirectly every one in the country, whether it is realized or not, is less the soundness of New Deal experiments and the credit for trade recovery than it is the probability of a general collapse of our economic system from the increasing debt burden. Reassurance on a sound currency system is needed, and none the less so even if the dollar has been relatively stable during the past year. No assurance is possible so long as the Federal deficits continue and especially in the sum of three to four or five billions a year.

The outcome of the next election will show whether the country is willing to take the risk of carrying several more billions of debt. It is mainly the promise of the Republicans under Landon to balance the budget and then to follow with a sound currency based on gold and a return to Congress of delegated powers to the Executive to regulate the value of the dollar, that gives hopes to finance and industry—and consequently to investment and speculative markets—of easier times.

Wall street conceded that the Republican platform went as far as it was prudently possible to go, in view of swinging foreign currencies, along the line of stabilization. It recognized the new hope springing up among opponents of the New Deal. The April decline in stocks and the good tone of business as the summer opens have prepared the stock market for better prices, given any outside incouragement. Prices last week edged forward with a moderate increase in activity, and the feeling turned decidedly more cheerful. The markets liked the fighting spirit injected into the situation by the selection of Landon as the Republican candidate to oppose the New Deal.

Trade news was favorable. Railroad car loadings rose sharply over corresponding week of a year ago and they increased over the preceding week. The same tendency was noted in electrical output. The steel industry's rate rose a little and miscellaneous and railroad demand is making good the slackening in the motor industry, which incidentally enjoyed the best business in May that it has had in years.

This week will see the outpouring of the first millions of soldiers' bonus money, and for a while at least retail trade should feel a decided fillip. The country appears to be in about as good condition to withstand the nervous strain of an election year as it usually is. No great onrush of commercial enterprise need be expected this summer or in early autumn, but the position merits confidence.

Babson Holds Bull Market Will Continue

Babson Park, Mass., June 14.—The overwhelming selection of the Republican standard-bearer has strengthened G. O. P. election hopes. I feel that the party has made a wise choice as he is probably the only Republican today who stands a chance of defeating President Roosevelt. The conventions, of course, formally lift the curtain on the campaign itself. With these conclaves out of the way (Mr. Roosevelt's renomination is undisputed), investors are turning their attention to a new worry: How will the market act between now and November?

The recent sharp drop in market prices and activity was immediately blamed on politics by most financial writers. They believe that the market will be "dead" from now until after election. There is a general feeling in brokerage circles that prices will move listlessly from June to November. In fact, whatever happens the campaign is usually made the "goat."

A study of the past ten campaign years shows that such conclusions are all nonsense and that business exerts a far greater influence on stock prices even in election years than do political harangues or partisan oratory. I doubt if this year will be any exception.

The April dip in stock prices and the drifting trend since then is simply Wall Street's method of discounting the usual early summer industrial slump. The fact that the market has already recovered half its early loss means that the seasonal let-down this year is not expected to be serious. Better business during coming months will be a much more potent influence on the market than stump speeches. After what we have been through since 1933, I see no reason for turning bearish now over the probability of the Administration's re-election. On the other hand, an unexpected Republican victory would probably bring a sharp bullish move in stocks.

Why doesn't someone suggest that VETERANS
Keep their Bonus Money?

A Statement by F. D. Akers

WITH so many "offers," "special deals" and other "spend-your-money-quick" propositions currently made to veterans, one wonders who is really going to get the bonus Congress voted; the veterans—or a lot of other people who are trying to make him spend it before he receives it.

Why doesn't someone suggest that the veterans keep their bonus, or at least part of it?

After all, the bonus which the average veteran will receive represents the hardest-earned money anybody ever got . . . money won at the expense of hardship, privation and, in many cases, serious risk to life itself. Certainly, thoughtful veterans will agree it should be used with the most judicious care.

That is how we feel about it.

CO-OPERATION WITH ANY VETERAN

Naturally, we do not want to discourage any prospective purchasers. We are in business to sell automobiles. But we emphatically do not want to lure buyers—particularly veterans, to whom the whole nation recognizes its obligation—into spending money that should be deposited with a savings bank as a safeguard for future emergencies.

However, to those veterans who feel convinced in their own minds that their bonus money will permit them to own a new or used car—we extend every sound convenience in making a purchase that any other motor company can extend.

An Invitation

We congratulate the veterans on receiving their bonus as a just reward for their sacrifices. And we invite those who—of their own accord—are now in the market for a car to discuss with us sound and convenient means of purchasing it.

Culbertson on Bridge

Rebids by Opening No Trump Bidder.

If, over an opening one no trump by you, your partner raises to two no trump, he has shown you a holding of about one and one-half honor tricks.

As opening hand, you now should pass only if your hand contains the minimum of four honor tricks (or three and one-half honor tricks).

If you hold four plus honor tricks or more, or only four honor tricks, but seven or eight honor cards, you should proceed to three no trump.

With a biddable four-card major suit included in your no trump requirement, you may show this suit after a raise to two no trump unless your hand is a minimum.

When your partner raises to three no trump, in every case the opening hand should pass.

A Bad Double.

Any bid that can lose 1,000 points and gain only 100 or 200 is, per se, a bad bid. In every game there arises this question of playing with or against the "percentages." In poker it obviously is foolish to risk $5 when only $1 may be won, and even in contract, which is in no sense a gambling game, the clever player refuses to risk much to gain little.

In doubling a slam contract the utmost care must be taken to make sure that the double will not defeat its own purpose; in other words, that it will not guide declarer to the line of play that will fulfill his contract. That was the fate of West's double in the following hand.

The bidding:

NORTH
♠ K Q 10 8 4
♥ J 9 8
♦ A 3

WEST
♠ 3
♥ A Q 10 4
♦ 8 7 6 2

EAST
♠ 9 7 5 2
♥ 7 6 5 3 2
♦ Q 9 5
♣ 10

SOUTH
♠ A J 6
♥ K
♦ K J 10 4
♣ K 9 8 5 2

North	East	South	West
1 spade	Pass	2 clubs	Pass
3 clubs	Pass	3 spades	Pass
4 spades	Pass	5 diamonds	Pass
6 clubs	Pass	Pass	Double
Redouble	Pass	Pass	Pass

(North-South were not using asking bids.)

West decided that the safest opening was a diamond, so he led the eight. Declarer allowed this to ride to his own tenace. East put up the queen and declarer's king won. A low club was led to dummy's queen, and declarer carefully noted the fall of East's ten. The penalty double from West persuaded him to believe that the ten was blank and, therefore, he returned to his hand with the spade ace and led the nine of clubs through West. The latter ducked and so did dummy. Another club was led to dummy's ace, and now declarer was faced with the problem of re-entering his hand to draw the last trump. Of one thing he felt positive: West must have the heart ace for his double. He was not nearly so certain that another spade lead to the jack would go unruffed by West. So he led a heart and West was on lead with the ace. In desperation he laid down the heart queen, but declarer ruffed, drew the last trump and claimed the balance. The double certainly had been helpful!

Arlington Home Is Opened by Post

Many home-seekers were Virginia-bound yesterday to attend the opening of the most recent Washington Post model home at 2307 North Nottingham street, in nearby Arlington County. This display residence will be open daily and Sunday until 8 p. m.

Built by the Gardiner Construction Co., it is presented by A. S. Gardiner and furnished by P. J. Nee Co. It may be viewed by driving out Lee Highway to the 5000 block, just past the Robert E. Lee School, to the sign directing the way to the property.

The presentation house is a brick bungalow, quality-built throughout, containing large rooms and attractive tile bath with shower. The second floor is sufficiently large for two additional rooms and bath.

The house has a cellar, is screened and weatherstripped and equipped with copper flashings and spouting.

Radio Waves and Ripples

The standard of works submitted in the N. B. C. Music Guild contest for new and original chamber music works by American composers is of a surprising quality, according to announcement of Frank Black, chairman of the awards committee. In fact they are so excellent that a winner is not expected before fall. The first prize will be $1,000.

Black says: "To give each of these manuscripts the thorough consideration pledged by our committee will require several more weeks. (More than 600 works were submitted by February 29, when the competition closed.) Those who have not had their manuscripts returned will know their works are among those being judged.

The competition for the honor of being named Washington's best commercial announcer ends today. Judges will give their selections to Henry Kaufman, of the advertising agency bearing his name, as quickly as their minds can be made up and the winner should be known before many days have passed. The award, a huge silver cup, will be made at a luncheon to be attended by broadcast company officials, announcers and judges.

There is much to be said in favor of Kaufman's annual contest as now conducted, but I always will wonder how differently the results might be were the judges selected from run-of-mine listeners.

Arguments contrary to this type of board of judges are indeed sound and undoubtedly the objective is obtained by selecting a board of judges from radio editors and others directly interested in one way or another with perfecting the skill of announcers' work on the air. But that question nevertheless will be in mind again this year.

In the first contest, last year, Bill Coyle, of WMAL, received the honor. If an N. B. C. announcer wins again this year the cup stays another year in the N. B. C. executive offices. If a WJSV or WOL announcer wins, the cup moves accordingly.

Comes now an interesting announcement from New York saying the Intercity network has scheduled a bit of fun for tonight entitled "Charades," but which really is the old game brought up to date using the modern twist of "what's this one?"—meaning those silly things everyone is doing with his hands these days which can be translated into a song title or popular expression. Maybe the program was called off, or maybe WOL has previous commitments. Anyhow, WOL does not have it scheduled at 7:15 p. m., when it is due on the network. My own shrinking opinion is it would be pretty good fun.

"Molasses 'an' January," who make fun on the networks in "Showboat" and also are known to air audiences as "Pick and Pat," take a bow this week at the Fox. Jackie Heller, whom you've heard many times by way of the air, also is present on the Fox stage.
